sions,[84] declarations,[85] or depositions[86] of accused, and documentary evidence.[87] The evidence that was admissible on the trial of the action in which the perjury was committed is admissible on the trial of an indictment for the perjury,[88] but it is not essential to retry the case,[89] and the evidence admitted should be limited to such evidence as tends to establish the perjury.[90] Evidence not connected with,[91] or having no bearing on the guilt or innocence of,[92] accused should be rejected. Evidence showing the motive underlying a prosecution for perjury is inadmissible.[93]

Res gestæ. As in the case of criminal[94] or civil[95] cases generally, matters constituting a part of the res gestæ are admissible in evidence,[96] but evidence too remote should not be admitted.[97]

Record of proceedings in which perjury was committed,[98] while admissible to establish the elements of the crime as necessarily appear therein,[99] is not admissible to show the falsity of the testimony.[1]

[§ 152] b. Intent, Knowledge, and Motive.[2] Since willfulness and a corrupt intent are essential elements of perjury,[3] evidence tending to prove such issues is admissible as going to the very substance of the offense.[4] Evidence to rebut the existence of a corrupt intent is admissible in favor of accused,[5] relative to crime, in the investigation of which the perjury is alleged to have been committed, is admissible).

[c] Evidence incompetent.—In a prosecution for having made a false report to the superintendent of banks, although items of evidence may be competent in proving that the items specified in the indictment were included at their face values in the report, as alleged, that fact does not make competent evidence that such values were excessive or then known to defendant to be so. [a] Evidence held admissible.—(1) Under Code (1897) § 4872, where a surety on a bail bond was charged with swearing falsely that he owned certain property, evidence that he did not know the terms of a decree quieting title in others was admissible to show good faith. State v. Lazarus, 181 Iowa 625, 164 NW 1037. (2) In a prosecution for perjury in verifying the genuineness of signatures on a recall petition, accused should have been permitted to state his belief as to the genuineness of the signatures, uninfluenced by any adverse decision or criticism of the court, and if he chose should have been permitted to state the circumstances inducing that belief. [a] Evidence held admissible as showing motive.—(1) Testimony as to a statement by defendant to another grand jury witness that witness could get a sum of money for going away somewhere. Brzezinski v. U. S., 198 Fed. 65, 117 CCA 173. (2) Defendant was charged with perjury in having falsely sworn, in an examination before the superintendent of elections as to the alleged illegal registration of defendant and M and W that all three had slept in a certain building during a given time. M was permitted to testify that on defendant's telling him to register he stated that he was not of age, whereupon defendant said that he himself voted when he was sixteen, and told witness to go ahead and register and he would see that no harm came to him. W testified that defendant told him to register, and that if any harm came to him he would see that he got out. It was held that the evidence was competent as establishing a motive for defendant's testimony before the superintendent that each man was qualified by residence to register. Peo. v. Cahill, 193 N. Y. 232, 86 NE 39, 20 LRA NS 1084. (3) The record of a former conviction for a crime against the United States in a prosecution instituted by the same person who was the prosecutrix in the perjury case is admissible as showing the state of the prisoner's mind in its relation to the false testimony which he gave against her in the civil suit. Com. v. Bobanic, 62 Pa. Super. 40.

or other competent evidence[19] is admissible, although it has been held that the proceeding can be shown only by the record.[20] The admissibility of the record is not affected by an amendment correcting an error therein.[21] The record of some case other than that in which the perjury was committed is inadmissible.[22]

[§ 154] d. Jurisdiction and Authority To Administer Oath.[23] For the purpose of showing the jurisdiction of the court, tribunal, or body to try or hear the case, in which or to investigate the matter concerning which the perjury was committed,[24] the record of the action or proceeding,[25] or other competent evidence,[26] is admissible, and accused may introduce any competent evidence to show lack of jurisdiction.[27] The right of the officer administering the oath to act as such may be proved by parol evidence,[28] or by the deputation showing his appointment.[29] Evidence showing the right of a justice of the peace to preside over an inquest is admissible.[30] Accused may introduce evidence to show that the officer was never legally appointed,[31] but where perjury is assignable on an oath administered by a de facto officer,[32] evidence impeaching his right to office is inadmissible.[33]

[§ 155] e. Administration, Form, and Making of Oath.[34] Any competent evidence is admissible to prove the administration of the oath to accused,[35] and it is proper for the person who administered the oath so to testify;[36] and so also may one who saw the oath administered.[37] Where the services of an interpreter were required, he may testify that he was sworn as interpreter and interpreted the oath to accused.[38] The subpœna docket,[39] or accused's signature to affidavits filed in the proceeding in which the perjury was committed, is admissible to prove the fact that he was sworn as a witness in the case.[40] Where the perjury is based on the verification of a civil complaint, the complaint is admissible to show that it was verified by accused.[41] Where it appears that accused was sworn by a particular officer or in a certain county, evidence is admissible to show that in fact he was sworn by a different officer,[42] or in a different county.[43]

(2) Certificate of stenographer taking deposition in shorthand. Rex v. Landry, supra. (3) Testimony of witnesses as to

[§ 156] f. Materiality of Statement.[44] The materiality of the false testimony[45] may be shown by the record of the proceedings in which the testimony was given,[46] or by the testimony there given,[47] or by all or so much of the pleadings therein as show the issues,[48] together with such other facts proved on the trial as tend to show the testimony to be on a material issue.[49] When the opening statement of counsel presented an issue of fact to the jury, it is admissible to show the materiality of the false testimony given in support of it.[50] But testimony aliunde the record showing the state of the cause at the time the alleged false testimony was introduced is admissible to demonstrate the materiality of the testimony.[51] The opinion of a witness who heard the testimony is not admissible as evidence to prove its materiality or lack of materiality.[52] And evidence, offered by defendant to show immateriality of his false testimony, that has or can have no effect or bearing on the materiality is inadmissible.[53]

[§ 157] g. Matter Sworn To.[54] Where a witness is indicted for perjury, the prosecution may prove by parol evidence what accused swore to,[55] although such testimony was not reduced to writing[56] or signed[57] as required by statute. Can.—Rex v. Doyle, 12 CanCrCas 69; Rex v. Prasiloski, 15 B. C. 29.

[a] Thus questions to, and answers by, an accused juror on his voir dire examination may properly be proved by the state's attorney, clerk of the court, or any other competent witness who heard the same. Leaptrot v. State, 51 Fla. 57, 40 S 616.

[b] Perjury before grand jury.—(1) Matter sworn to before the grand jury may be shown by the testimony of a member of that body (State v. Carothers, 69 Or. 382, 138 P 1077; Ice v. State, 84 Tex. Cr. 418, 208 SW 345) (2) or by the clerk of the grand jury (State v. Carothers, supra). (3) Evidence of a sworn statement made to the county attorney is admissible as persuasive of the fact that the same statement was made before the grand jury. Logan v. State, 96 Tex. Cr. 601, 258 SW 830. (4) A statute providing that a grand juror may be required to disclose the testimony of a witness before the grand jury on a trial of such witness for perjury has been held not to make the testimony of the juror admissible on a trial for false swearing, where false swearing is an offense distinct from perjury. Com. v. Scowden, 92 Ky. 120, 17 SW 205, 13 KyL 404. (5) In England a member of a grand jury cannot testify as to what accused swore to before that body (Reg. v. Hughes, 1 C. & K. 519, 47 ECL 519; Reg. v. Gazard, 8 C. & P. 595, 34 ECL 911, 173 Reprint 633), (6) but another witness on the same indictment who was in the grand jury room while such person was under examination is competent to prove what he swore to (Reg. v. Hughes, supra), (7) and so is a police officer who was stationed within the grand jury room door, these persons not being sworn to secrecy as are the members of the grand jury (Reg. v. Hughes, supra).

mony of accused,[58] or by the testimony of the presiding judge,[59] or by the introduction of the transcript of the testimony;[60] and such portions of the record as are necessary to show what the false testimony was may be read by the court reporter.[61] Under some circumstances the affidavit of another party is admissible for the purpose of showing what the prisoner swore to.[62] The fact that a witness is unable to give the entire testimony given by accused does not prevent him from testifying to the particular part of his testimony on which the perjury is assigned.[63]

Retraction. When it has been shown that accused testified as charged, evidence that he subsequently testified the same way without being again sworn is admissible to show that he did not explain, qualify, or retract his former testimony.[64]

[§ 158] h. Falsity or Truth of Statement.[65] The falsity of the statement made by accused may be shown by any evidence which is competent against him,[66] such as statements either verbal or in writing, under oath or not, which conflict with the statement on which the indictment or information is founded,[67] and matters constituting a part of the

"Any fact which tends to prove the falsity or the truth of the sworn statement for which he stands indicted is relevant." Hannegan v. State, 5 Ala. A. 142, 148, 59 S 376.

[a] Thus "the falsity of the evidence of a person charged with false swearing may be shown by the evidence of living witnesses or . . . by documentary or written evidence or it may be shown by facts that clearly and convincingly establish the falsity of the statements made by the accused." Blakey v. Com., 183 Ky. 493, 499, 209 SW 516.

[b] Rule applied to testimony that accused lived with his wife, as contradicting accused's testimony in marriage annulment proceeding. Peo. v. Reitz, (Cal. A.) 261 P 526.

[c] Book entries and the like.—Falsity of statement may be shown by: (1) Books and papers of accused kept under his control and subject to his inspection. Jacobs v. U. S., 31 F. (2d) 568; U. S. v. Mayer, 26 F. Cas. No. 15,753, Deady 127. (2) Book entries of his employer coupled with the fact that accused drew full pay for the day in question, as showing that he was not present at the time and place of an occurrence which he testified he had seen. Jordan v. State, 16 Ala. A. 51, 74 S 864. (3) Ship's manifest, as showing the date of an alien's entry into the United States concerning which accused had sworn. Sullivan v. U. S., 161 Fed. 253, 88 CCA 289.

[d] Physical condition of accused at reasonable time after commission of offense on trial for which he falsely testified he was free from a certain disease at time of offense. Dickerson v. State, 18 Wyo. 440, 111 P 857, 116 P 448 (time when he became infected immaterial except as showing infection at time of offense).

[e] Testimony of physician.—Peo. v. Reitz, (Cal. A.) 261 P 526 (physical condition of wife, to show falsity of husband's statement in marriage annulment proceeding); Reed v. State, 76 Tex. Cr. 335, 174 SW 1065 (as to chastity, in prosecution for falsely testifying as to sexual intercourse with prosecutrix).

[f] Testimony of son.—State v. Snyder, 94 N. J. L. 277, 109 A 925 [aff 93 N. J. L. 18, 107 A 167] (as to true reason for separation, in alienation suit by wife of defendant).

[g] Testimony of suborned witness.—State v. Cerfoglio, 46 Nev. 332, 205 P 791, 213 P 102, 27 ALR 848 (to lay foundation that defendant's testimony was false).

[h] Testimony of wife.—Spearman v. State, 68 Tex. Cr. 449, 152 SW 915, 44 LRANS 243 (to show falsity of husband's testimony in divorce action).

[i] In a prosecution for perjury for denying the execution of a mortgage, evidence of the genuineness of the signature of an attesting witness who had died, admitted to prove the execution of the mortgage in accordance with the formalities required by law, cannot be considered as evidence that accused signed the mortgage. Walker v. State, 107 Ala. 5, 18 S 393.

[j] Evidence of corroborative circumstances is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that it also tends to prove another distinct offense. Maynard v. State, 135 Ill. 416, 25 NE 740.

[k] Cognate perjuries.—The prosecution, to sustain a proper assignment of perjury, may show the falsity of statements regarding other and correlative facts. Brown v. State, 57 Miss. 424; Anderson v. State, 24 Tex. A. 705, 7 SW 40 [overr State v. Buie, 43 Tex. 532]; Reg. v. Gardiner, 8 C. & P. 737, 34 ECL 992, 173 Reprint 696, 2 Moody C. C. 95, 169 Reprint 38.

[l] Opinion of witness as to falsity.—On a trial for perjury, a witness for the state, after reciting what accused testified to when the alleged perjury was committed, may state that it was false, at the same time stating facts which conclusively show that it was false. res gestæ of the fact or issue in regard to which accused testified falsely.[68] The truth of the matter sworn to is admissible only to show the falsity thereof.[69] Evidence of the result of the trial in which the perjury was committed is ordinarily inadmissible to show truth or falsity;[70] but where accused swore to an alibi, evidence of the guilt of the person in whose favor he swore falsely may be shown to establish the falsity of the testimony.[71] Evidence of the conduct of defendant at, and prior to, his trial at which accused's statements were made,[72] and confessions of guilt by such person made in the absence of defendant,[73] are inadmissible, although the contrary has been held.[74] To prove the truth of his testimony, accused is entitled to introduce any competent,[75] but not incompetent,[76] evidence in rebuttal of evidence of falsity. Self-serving declarations are inadmissible.[77] or insufficient[81] to support a conviction may be found in the notes.

Oral evidence, when exclusively relied on, must be by two witnesses, or one witness corroborated by circumstances proved by independent testimony.[82]

Documentary evidence with circumstances showing corrupt intent may, in some jurisdictions, dispense with the necessity of testimony by a living witness,[83] but the documentary evidence must be equally as clear and convincing as oral evidence.[84]

Circumstantial evidence alone may, in some jurisdictions, be sufficient,[85] where such evidence is sufficient to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt;[86] but the circumstances must be consistent with guilt and inconsistent with innocence.[87] But in jurisdictions where positive testimony of two witnesses or one witness and corroborating circumstances is required,[88] positive evidence is necessary to establish guilt,[89] and purely circumstantial evidence alone is never sufficient.[90] But circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to fulfill the requirement of corroboration of a witness, even though not sufficient to establish guilt.[91]

[§ 160] b. Intent and Knowledge of Falsity.[92] To convict of perjury it must be shown beyond reasonable doubt that the testimony of accused was given willfully and corruptly,[93] and with knowledge of the falsity of the matter sworn to.[94] Knowledge may be shown by circumstantial evidence.[95]

[a] Cases in which living witness is unnecessary.—A living witness may be dispensed with and documentary or written testimony be relied upon to convict in cases where a person is charged with the perjury, directly disproved by documentary or written testimony springing from himself, with circumstances showing a corrupt intent; in cases where the perjury charged is contradicted by the public record proved to have been well known to defendant when he took the oath, the oath only being proved to have been taken; in cases where a party is charged with taking an oath contrary to what he must necessarily have known to be the truth, and the false swearing can be proved by his own letters, relating the facts sworn to, or by other written testimony existing and being found in the possession of defendant, and which has been treated by him as containing the evidence of the fact recited in it. [a] "Knowledge is an intangible thing resting in the mind, the possession of which may be admitted by the party or be shown by proof of facts,

[§ 161] c. Proceedings in Which Oath Was Administered.[96] Since it is necessary to prove the identity of the proceeding in which the perjury was committed,[97] evidence sufficient to identify the proceedings must be introduced by the prosecution.[98] Thus in order to convict a witness of perjury alleged to have been committed on the trial of a case or other proceeding in a court of record, the record of the case, or a duly authenticated transcript thereof, is necessary to prove the judicial proceeding in the course of which the alleged perjury was committed,[99] unless such formal proof is waived.[1] But it has been held that, where the court trying the perjury is the court before which the perjury was committed, the record is not necessary to identify the case, as the court is presumed to know its own record.[2] Where the pendency of the action in which the false testimony was given has been shown by the records, and the trial thereof by oral testimony, the trial and disposition of the case need not be shown by record.[3]

[§ 162] d. Jurisdiction and Authority To Administer Oath.[4] The burden of proof being on the prosecution to establish the false swearing before an officer or tribunal having authority to administer the oath,[5] the prosecution must introduce sufficient evidence to establish such authority.[6] As to the authority of the officer administering the oath, it is sufficient to prove that he was acting as such,[7] without putting in evidence his commission or other facts giving jurisdiction.[8]

[§ 163] e. Administration, Form, and Making of Oath.[9] Not only must the prosecution prove that accused was sworn,[10] but the evidence must be sufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt the administration of the oath;[11] but circumstantial evidence is sufficient for this purpose.[12] Proof that accused was sworn as a witness establishes, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that a binding oath was administered to him;[13] but proof that he testified as a witness is not sufficient evidence that he was sworn as a witness.[14] In a prosecution for false swearing to an affidavit the testimony of the officer, whose jurat is attached to the false affidavit, that he swore the accused,[15] or that it was his general practice to administer a proper oath under the circumstances and he is certain the custom was followed in the particular instance,[16] is sufficient; and the official certificate of a notary, magistrate, or other officer, together with proof of the authenticity of the signatures of affiant and the officer, is prima facie proof of the proper execution of the affidavit,[17] and is sufficient unless contradicted by accused;[18] but where the jurat is signed at a later time and not in the presence of accused, other proof independent of the jurat is necessary.[19] Evidence that the oath was never actually administered must be strong and convincing to justify the court in taking the case from the jury.[20]

Form. On a trial for false swearing at a preliminary examination before a justice of the peace, the testimony of the justice showing that the oath administered was in statutory form is sufficient without proving that accused held up his right hand.[21]

[§ 164] f. Materiality of Testimony or Assertion.[22] Since the prosecution must prove that accused swore falsely as to a material matter,[23] the evidence must clearly show the materiality of the false testimony.[24] Where the perjury went to the very gist of the case, further evidence that it was material is unnecessary.[25] The fact that the testimony was received is not, standing alone, sufficient.[26] In no event can the materiality of the testimony or assertion assigned as perjury be established by the opinions of witnesses.[27]

[§ 165] g. Matter Sworn To.[28] The prosecution must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that accused testified as charged.[29] It is sufficient if the prosecution proves the statements substantially as made.[30] Ambiguous evidence is not sufficient to show the matter sworn to.[31]

[§ 166] h. Falsity of Oath.[32] The falsity of the statements constituting the alleged perjury must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt,[33] and in some jurisdictions may be established by circumstantial evidence.[34] Where no motive is shown for the giving of the false testimony, its falsity must be clearly and convincingly established.[35] The evidence showing the falsity of the oath must, to be sufficient, be identified with the particular matter about which the alleged false testimony was given.[36] Mere proof of the improbability of the truth of the statement, without affirmative proof of its falsity, is insufficient to establish the falsity.[37] It is not, however, necessary that the whole of the testimony given by accused at the time of the alleged perjury should be given in evidence; so much thereof as relates to the particular fact on which the perjury is assigned is sufficient.[38]

Contradictory statements. A statement of accused, directly contradicting that upon which the perjury is assigned, is not sufficient evidence of the falsity of the latter,[39] but other additional extrinsic evidence is necessary to establish its falsity.[40]

[§ 167] 4. Number of Witnesses and Corroboration*—a. Early Rule. It was formerly held that a conviction for perjury could not be had except upon the direct testimony of two witnesses.[41]

[a] An accomplice: (1) May be the one witness. Peo. v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 240, 63 P 351. (2) May not be the one witness. Godby v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 360, 227 SW 192. (3) Must be criminally connected with the crime on trial. Wooten v. State, 91 Tex. Cr. 107, 237 SW 921.

[b] Living witness is required. Canal Zone v. Kerr, 2 Canal Zone 262.

[c] Competent witnesses are all those permitted to testify on trial. Madden v. State, 26 Okl. Cr. 251, 223 P 716.

[d] Competency of witnesses to the alleged perjury is not affected by the rule. State v. Ricketts, 74 N. C. 187.

[e] False swearing in bankruptcy proceeding may be shown by evidence which contradicts the testimony of defendant and preponderates it so as to justify the jury in finding the latter false and made knowingly and fraudulently by defendant. Kahn v. U. S., 214 Fed. 54, 130 CCA 494 [certiorari den 234 U. S. 763 mem, 34 SCt 997 mem, 58 L. ed. 1581 mem].

[f] Directed verdict should be given where the rule is not complied with. Waters v. State, 30 Tex. A. 284, 17 SW 411.

[g] Element of offense which must be so proved is falsity of material matter sworn to. Ward v. State, 83 Fla. 311, 91 S 189.

[h] Rule applies only: (1) To cases in which oral evidence is relied on to convict, and where one oath is placed against another. U. S. v. Wood, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 430, 10 L. ed. 527; Mallard v. State, 19 Ga. A. 99, 90 SE 1044. (2) Where conviction is based upon oath against oath, and does not preclude conviction by circumstantial evidence alone. State v. Cerfoglio, 46 Nev. 332, 205 P 791, 213 P 102, 27 ALR 848.

[i] Rule does not apply in cases where proof must of necessity be court;[45] and it has been said that the rule has been so relaxed that indubitable facts absolutely incompatible with the truth of the testimony charged to be false are sufficient.[46] In jurisdictions where the guilt of accused may be established by circumstantial evidence[47] the facts constituting such circumstantial evidence must be sworn to by at least one witness supported by corroborating evidence.[48]

[§ 169] (2) Necessity of Positive Testimony of One Witness. Except in jurisdictions where circumstantial evidence alone may be sufficient to convict,[49] or where a living witness may be dispensed with altogether,[50] positive and direct testimony[51] of at least one[52] credible[53] witness is absolutely necessary in a prosecution for perjury; and the testimony of the single witness must absolutely and in positive terms contradict the statement of the accused assigned for perjury.[54] Direct evidence is not limited to a denial in ipsissimis verbis of the testimony given by accused, but includes any positive testimony of a contrary state of facts from that sworn to by him at the former trial, or which is absolutely incompatible with his evidence, or physically inconsistent with the facts so testified to by him.[55]

[§ 170] (3) Corroboration—(a) In General.—aa. Necessity. It is a general rule, incorporated in the statutes of some jurisdictions,[56] that in no case can a conviction for perjury be secured and sustained on the uncorroborated testimony of one witness to the falsity of the matter on which the perjury is assigned.[57] The underlying principle of this rule is based on circumstantial evidence. Mallard v. State, 19 Ga. A. 99, 90 SE 1044; Peo. v. Doody, 172 N. Y. 165, 64 NE 807.

[j] Prosecutions for false swearing are within the rule. Hansford v. Com., 170 Ky. 700, 186 SW 498; Goslin v. Com., 121 Ky. 698, 90 SW 223, 28 KyL 683; Aguierre v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 519, 21 SW 256 (statutory false swearing).

[a] Confession in open court: (1) Means that the party must be charged with the crime confessed, that the confession must be made in open court after the party has been properly cautioned as the law requires, and must be made in the case pending against the confessor. Butler v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 483, 38 SW 46. (2) Does not mean a confession in another court as a witness in another case. Butler v. State, supra.

that, if there be but one witness to prove the allegation of falsity, then oath is placed against oath and if remains doubtful where the truth lies, the oath of accused, which is alleged to be false, being sufficient to counterpoise the testimony of a single witness.[58] However, this requirement of corroboration applies only to proof of the falsity of the oath,[59] and not to other elements of the offense,[60] no corroboration being necessary to establish the taking of the oath,[61] the matter sworn to,[62] or the venue[63] or time[64] of the offense.

[§ 171] bb. Degree. Where a conviction is sought on the testimony of one witness and corroborating evidence, the corroboration must be of material matter charged in the indictment.[65] While in many cases it has been held that the witness must be strongly corroborated,[66] it has also been held, although there is authority to the contrary,[67] that it need not be so strong as to equal the positive testimony of another witness,[68] nor so strong that standing alone it would justify a conviction in a case where the testimony of a single witness would suffice for that purpose,[69] but it must be sufficient to connect accused with the perpetration of the offense and lead to the inference of his guilt.[70] Evidence confirmatory of the one witness in some slight particulars only is not sufficient.[71] But evidence is sufficient if of such a character as to turn the scale and overcome the oath of accused and the legal presumption of his innocence,[72] or if, when taken in connection with all the other testimony, the falsity of accused's sworn statements is established beyond a reasonable doubt.[73] It has been said that there can be no rule laid down by the law as to what facts or circumstances amount to corroboration.[74]

Interested witness. A witness who corroborates the state's witness is an interested witness if his corroboration of accused's testimony would be an admission of his own guilt.[75]

[§ 172] cc. Manner—(aa) In General. The general rule is that the corroborative evidence means evidence aliunde which tends to show the perjury independent of any declaration or admission of accused[76] or of the witness to be corroborated.[77] The corroboration must be by proof of material and independent facts and circumstances, which, taken and considered together, tend in confirmation of the testimony of the single witness to establish the falsity of the oath;[78] and evidence merely showing that the account of the witness is probable will not do.[79] Such support may be furnished by record,[80] by writing,[81] or by facts and circumstances.[82] But it has been held the corroboration cannot be supplied by the testimony of one who is not a credible witness, such as an accomplice.[83]

[§ 173] (bb) By Circumstances. The corroboration may be by circumstantial evidence.[84] The corroborating circumstances need not be proved by direct testimony specifically corroborating the testimony of the main witness,[85] but may consist of proof of independent facts which together tend to establish the main fact, that is, the falsity of the oath, and which together strongly corroborate the truth of the testimony of the single witness who has testified to such falsity.[86]

[§ 174] (cc) By Declarations or Admissions of Accused. While proof of a contradictory statement of accused concerning the matter in issue is not alone sufficient to sustain a conviction for perjury,[87] yet such proof together with the testimony of a single witness,[88] or such proof supported by other corroborating circumstances,[89] may be sufficient to establish the falsity of the matter alleged. false and contradictory statements, however, is not sufficient to corroborate the testimony of a single witness.[90]

[§ 175] (b) Corroboration between Assignments. Where there are several assignments of perjury,[91] the testimony of a single witness must be corroborated with respect to the assignment concerning which he testified.[92] Proof of one assignment is not corroborated by proof of another,[93] even though all the perjuries were committed at the same time and place.[94] Where, however, there is one assignment of a continuous nature, the rule is otherwise.[95]

[§ 176] E. Trial, Review, and Punishment*—1. Questions of Law and Fact—a. Questions of Law—(1) In General. The sufficiency of facts and circumstances to constitute material confirmatory proof of a single witness' testimony is a question of law for the court.[96] Where the pleadings show the pendency of the judicial proceeding in which the false testimony was given and the joinder of issue therein, the questions as to pendency and joinder of issue become matters of law.[97]

[§ 177] (2) Jurisdiction. Whether the court trying the case in which the perjury was committed had jurisdiction thereof is a question of law for the court.[98] So it is for the court to determine whether the officer administering the oath to accused had authority to do so,[99] and whether the oath as administered was most binding upon the conscience of the witness.[1]

[§ 178] (3) Materiality of False Testimony.[2] Although there is some authority to the contrary,[3] the materiality[4] or relevancy[5] of a statement or testimony assigned as false is a question of law for the court, and should not be submitted to the jury.[6] But, like any other question of law, the question of materiality may be so mingled with the facts that the court should submit it to the jury, with proper instructions upon the law.[7]

Harmless error. The fact that the question of materiality was erroneously submitted to the jury is no ground for reversal if they determined the question as the court should have done.[8]

[§ 179] b. Questions of Fact. Under the general rules[9] all questions of fact arising during the trial are for the jury.[10] Thus, whether the oath of accused[11] and the statement made or testimony given thereunder[12] was knowingly and corruptly false is a question for the jury.

[§ 180] 2. Instructions—a. In General. General rules as to instructions[13] apply in prosecutions for perjury.[14] Accordingly the instructions should be clear and explicit,[15] easy of interpretation,[16] and not liable to mislead.[17] They should not assume facts not proved,[18] submit issues not in the case,[19] or invade the province of the jury.[20] Where an instruction has once been given, it need not be repeated,[21] but because requested instructions correspond in part with instructions given, accused is not deprived of the right to have that portion given which brings pertinently to the jury the issue involved.[22]

[§ 181] b. As to Material Allegations and Facts To Be Proved. The court should inform the jury what the material allegations of the indictment are,[23] and also what facts must be established before they can convict.[24]

Where there are several assignments,[25] the jury should ordinarily be informed as to which assignment or assignments of false testimony are submitted to them as a basis for their verdict.[26] Where the assignments of perjury are severable, it is proper for the court to select some of them to the exclusion of the others, and submit them to the jury on which to predicate a conviction.[27] When not severable, an instruction submitting all such predicates in solido is proper.[28] It is error to instruct that, if the prosecution shall prove any of the alleged assignments of perjury in manner and form as charged in the indictment, then accused should be found guilty, since this instruction ignores entirely the materiality of the testimony,[29] and it is reversible error for the court, upon its attention being specifically called thereto, to refuse to withdraw from the consideration of the jury defective or unsustained assignments.[30]

[§ 182] c. As to Intent and Knowledge of Falsity. A corrupt intent being an essential element of the crime of perjury,[31] the court must instruct the jury that, in order to convict, the false testimony must have been given willfully and corruptly, or other language must be used indicating that the swearing must have been intentionally false.[32]

Knowledge of falsity. So also it is error to omit the element of knowledge of the falsity of the testimony given,[33] and to fail or refuse to instruct that, if accused testified honestly in the belief of his

[a] "Knowingly."—An instruction that accused is guilty if he knowingly swore falsely is not defective in omitting to state that the swearing must have been willful and corrupt, since the word "knowingly" implies willfulness and corruption. Wheeler v. Peo., 63 Colo. 209, 165 P 257, 259 [cit Cyc]; Morgan v. State, 63 Miss. 162.

[b] "Willfully."—(1) Where the jury have been instructed that accused's statement must have been willfully false, there is no error in refusing to instruct that it must have been corruptly false, since the former implies the latter. Brown v. State, 57 Miss. 424. But see Cothran v. State, 39 Miss. 541 (holding that an instruction authorizing conviction if the jury believe the swearing was willful, although not corrupt, was error). (2) Omitting the word "willfully" may not make an instruction erroneous. Gatewood v. Com., 215 Ky. 360, 285 SW 193.

[c] "Wilfully" and "deliberately."—Under a statute providing that false swearing, to be indictable, must be done "wilfully" and "deliberately" the court should define the terms "wilfully" and "deliberately." statements, he would not be guilty.[34] However, it has been said that accused may admit his knowledge of the falsity of his testimony, and put the prosecution upon proof only of the question as to whether the alleged false testimony was in fact true or false; in which case an instruction omitting the element of knowledge would not be erroneous.[35]

[§ 183] d. As to Effect of Evidence. Where evidence is erroneously admitted, it is error to fail to charge that such evidence should be disregarded.[36]

Admitted for particular purpose. Where evidence is only admissible on a particular issue, but might be considered for other purposes, it is proper[37] on request[38] to limit the consideration thereof to such issue, and error to fail to do so.[39] Thus, where evidence is competent only as impeaching evidence, and is not material as substantive evidence, the court should so instruct.[40] So, also, if the judgment in the proceeding in which the perjury was committed is admitted on behalf of the prosecution, the court should give instructions limiting the effect of such evidence,[41] but, if the record of the judgment of conviction is not introduced, such instructions are not necessary.[42]

[§ 184] e. As to Degree of Proof Required. The court should instruct the jury as to the degree of proof[43] and the number and corroboration of witnesses[44] required to support a conviction for perjury, but it has been held that, in the absence of a request for such an instruction, there is no error in a failure to give it.[45] The necessity for a charge that the falsity of the oath must be proved by two witnesses or by one witness and corroborating circumstances is not obviated by the fact that more than one witness testified to the perjury,[46] but, under such circumstances, it has been held that the

[a] Honest belief.—Instruction that accused should be acquitted if he honestly believed the statement made is not erroneous by use of the word "honestly," for that added nothing to the word "believed." State v. Lynes, 194 Mo. A. 184, 185 SW 535.

[b] Evidence of belief.—Where accused was charged with perjury in falsely testifying regarding an alleged oral agreement as to payment of costs accompanying a written agreement of settlement signed by him, the refusal of a requested charge that the jury might consider the written agreement for what they might find it worth, as bearing on accused's understanding of the agreement, was error. State v. Loos, 145 Iowa 170, 123 NW 962.

[c] Inadvertence, agitation, or mistake.—(1) It is proper to tell the jury that a false statement made through inadvertence, or under agitation, or by mistake, is not perjury. Mares v. State, 71 Tex. Cr. 303, 158 SW 1130. (2) Failure to give such instruction, when there is evidence on which to base it, is error. Glasscock v. State, 101 Tex. Cr. 499, 276 SW 430; Mason v. State, 57 Tex. Cr. 319, 122 SW 871. (3) A charge is sufficient without calling special attention to accused's intoxicated condition. Sisk v. State, 28 Tex. A. 432, 13 SW 647.

[d] Intoxication.—Where justified by the evidence, an instruction should be given to acquit accused if at the time of the act accused was so intoxicated by cocaine or liquor as to be incapable of willfully and knowingly swearing false. Williams v. Com., 113 Ky. 652, 68 SW 871.

failure so to charge may be harmless.[47]

[§ 185] 3. Verdict and Conviction. General rules[48] govern the form and sufficiency of verdicts in prosecutions for perjury.[49] Thus the verdict in a perjury case must be responsive to the issues,[50] and not inconsistent.[51]

General verdict. Proof of the falsity of any one of several matters alleged in an information containing several assignments supports a general verdict of guilty,[52] although other assignments are not sustained.[53] So one good assignment of perjury will ordinarily support a general verdict of guilty,[54] although other assignments contained in the indictment are defective;[55] but when the attention of the trial court is specifically called to the question, it is reversible error to refuse to withdraw from the consideration of the jury such defective assignments;[55½] and it has been held that a general verdict on two counts is bad where the assignment in the second count is defective and the evidence on the first count is so contradictory as to leave room for doubt whether the jury would have found a verdict of guilty on that count if it had stood alone,[56] notwithstanding, if the first count had stood alone, the verdict could not have been touched.[57] A conviction for perjury need not allege that accused had knowledge of the falsity of the testimony on which the charge is founded.[58]

[§ 186] 4. New Trial. General rules[59] govern as to new trials in prosecutions for perjury.[60] Thus it is ground for a new trial that the proceeding in which the perjury was committed was not proved by legal evidence[61] or that there was prejudicial error in the giving of instructions.[62]

[§ 187] 5. Appeal and Error. The usual rules[63] are applicable to appeals or writs of error in prosecutions for perjury,[64] such as rules relating to the necessity for presenting objections in the lower court,[65] matters reviewable,[66] and harmless error.[67]

[§ 188] 6. Sentence and Punishment. Although not originally punishable by the courts as a crime,[68] perjury has for a long time been considered a crime triable and punishable as such.[69] The punishment now is usually a matter of statutory provision.[70] A sentence imposing a penalty of greater or less severity than that provided for by statute is error,[71] but such error constitutes no ground for reversal when the penalty is smaller than that prescribed.[72]

Imposing incapacity as witness. Under early English[73] and American[74] statutes, the practice was to make the disability of accused to give testimony a part of the sentence,[75] and under some modern statutes[76] a person is rendered incompetent as a witness by a conviction of perjury or subornation of perjury.[77] Assuming that such disability is properly a part of the sentence, its omission is not ground for reversal at the instance of accused.[78]

Where accused pleads guilty, the practice of imposing one half the maximum penalty has been approved.[79]

Irregularity cured. Where accused was sentenced out of term, the irregularity was cured by again sentencing him in court.[80]

VII. SUBORNATION OF PERJURY AND ATTEMPTS TO SUBORN[81]

[By William G. Bannon]

[§ 189] A. Definitions and Distinctions, and Nature and Elements of Offenses—1. Subornation—a. Definition. By the common law, subornation of perjury consists in procuring or instigating another to commit the crime of perjury.[82] In general the statutory definitions are in substance the same as the common-law definition,[83] although some definitions are broader in operation.[84]

[§ 190] b. Nature of Offense. It has been stated that subornation of perjury is but a particular form of perjury,[85] or is in substance the same as perjury,[86] and that it is accessorial in nature.[87] But it has been asserted or recognized that subornation is an offense at common law,[88] and usually under the statutes it is an offense separate and distinct from perjury[89] and false swearing;[90] and the view has been taken that one guilty of subornation may not be regarded as an accessory to the offense of perjury.[91]

Suborner as principal in perjury. A general statutory provision making a person who aids, abets, or procures the commission of an offense a principal has been construed as rendering the suborner a principal in the offense of perjury.[92] But it has been held that a statute making a principal offender of an accessory before the fact, although not present when the crime was committed, is not applicable to the crime of perjury where the offense of subornation is separately defined by statute.[93]

Felony or misdemeanor. At common law subornation of perjury is a misdemeanor,[94] but under some statutes it is a felony.[95] Where the offense, with the procurement of the commission of which accused is charged, is technically false swearing and a misdemeanor, under the federal laws the offense charged is also a misdemeanor.[96-97] severe than that of the common law, "because few were then convicted by reason of the compassion of the juries, and the punishment was lessened that more perjuries might be detected; but when we have found them out and the party convict, and no certain penalty, but left to the discretion of the Court, we ought to make them examples; for as anger does not become a Judge, so neither doth pity, for one is the mark of a foolish woman, as the other is of a passionate man." Rex v. Johnson, 2 Show. 1, 4, 89 Reprint 753.

[b] Federal Naturalization Act of June 29, 1906 (USCA tit 8 § 414), provides punishment of perjury in naturalization proceedings in preliminary stages as well as in final hearing. U. S. v. Dupont, 176 Fed. 823.

[c] In Oklahoma punishment for making false affidavit for a new trial is that prescribed by Rev. L. (1910) § 2219 par 2. Arnold v State, (Cr.) 132 P 1123 (construing the words "in or on any other trial or proceeding in a court of justice").

[d] Repeal of statute.—(1) Where penalties in a reënacting statute are repugnant to those in the earlier act, the latter is repealed. State v. Thomas, 149 La. 654, 89 S 887. (2) The penalty as prescribed by the act of 1839 (Clay Dig. p 71 § 4) was changed by the subsequent act of 1841 (Clay Dig. p 427 § 2). De Bernie v. State, 19 Ala. 23.

[e] Penalty held excessive in view of attendant circumstances. U. S. v. De los Santos, 32 Philippine 401; Rex v. Natanson, (Sask.) [1927] 2 West Wkly 154.

[f] Sentence held proper and in form prescribed by statute. Robinson v. State, 18 Fla. 898.

[g] Repugnant penalties.—In a prosecution under statute for false swearing in a sheriff's report and affidavit, the fact that the act also provided a different punishment for other violations of it did not prevent imposition of the punishment for false swearing, on the ground that the statute prescribed two repugnant penalties, so as to prevent the imposition of either. [§ 191] c. Construction of Applicable Statutes in General. The federal statute defining "subornation of perjury" embraces subornation of every sort of perjury.[98] Other statutory definitions of subornation of perjury have been construed to include the procuring of the commission of the offense of false swearing.[99]

[§ 192] d. Elements of Offense—(1) In General. In general, where the elements of perjury are present,[1] and there is a showing that the commission of the perjury was induced or procured by accused,[2] he is chargeable with the offense of subornation.[3]

[§ 193] (2) Perjury. To sustain an indictment for subornation of perjury, it is necessary that perjury shall have been in fact committed.[4] This rule applies in respect of a requirement that the oath must have been taken in a matter or proceeding in which an oath was authorized or required,[5] that the testimony must have been given in a judicial proceeding or in due course of justice;[6] that the court or tribunal must have had jurisdiction of the proceeding;[7] that the person who administered the oath must have had authority to administer it;[8] that the witness must have been duly sworn;[9] that the statement must have been material[10] and false;[11] and that it must have been made willfully,[12] or willfully and corruptly,[13] and with the suborned person's knowledge of its falsity.[14]

Determination as to existence of elements of perjury. In general, in determining whether the offense of subornation has been committed, the rules in respect of the perjury are the same as in the case of the offense of perjury itself.[15]

[§ 194] (3) Acts and Intent of Suborner. It is necessary that accused should have known or believed that the testimony given would be false;[16] that he should have known or believed that the witness would testify willfully and corruptly,[17] and with knowledge of falsity;[18] and that he should have knowingly[19] and willfully[20] induced or procured the witness to give such false testimony.[21]

Knowledge as to pendency of proceeding and prospective calling of witness. It has been held that it is not necessary that accused should have known that a proceeding was pending,[22] or that the subborned witness was to be called as a witness.[23]

Means of procurement. A person is guilty of subornation where he procures another by threats to commit perjury and the other elements of subornation are present.[24]

Presence of accused. It is not necessary that accused should have been present when the false statement was made in order that he may be guilty of subornation.[25]

[§ 195] e. Persons Liable.[26] Under a general statutory provision making all persons who aid or assist in the commission of a crime principals,[27] one who aids or assists another in procuring the commission of perjury is chargeable as a principal in respect of the offense of subornation.[28] According to some cases, one who acts through a third person in inducing the commission of the offense of perjury may be guilty of subornation.[29]

[§ 196] 2. Attempts To Suborn and Incitement To Commit Perjury[30]—a. In General. An attempt to commit subornation of perjury consists in attempting or endeavoring to induce another to do an act which, if committed, would itself amount to perjury.[31] While there is authority for the view that an attempt to suborn perjury is not the name of an offense,[32] in the absence of a statutory provision therefor,[33] the view has been expressed that an attempt or endeavor to procure the commission of perjury[34] or incitement to perjury[35] is an offense at common law, although perjury was not in fact committed. In some jurisdictions statutes provide for the punishment of anyone who attempts or endeavors to procure another to commit perjury.[36]

Felony or misdemeanor. At common law an attempt to suborn was a misdemeanor,[37] and a statute which makes offenses, not especially provided for, misdemeanors has been applied to this offense.[38] Under some special statutes the offense is a misdemeanor,[39] but in some jurisdictions the statutory offense of endeavoring to incite or procure the commission of perjury is a felony.[40]

Distinctions. The statutory offense of attempting to induce the giving of false testimony has been distinguished from the offense of attempting to procure the commission of perjury, in that the former offense may be committed even though the giving of the testimony would not constitute perjury.[41] Incitement to give false evidence or to give particular evidence regardless of its truth or falsity has been distinguished from an attempt to commit the offense of subornation of perjury.[42]

The entrapment of accused has been regarded as sufficient to relieve him from liability for an attempt to suborn.[43]

suborn must have reference to such an act as would have been perjury if successful,[44] and this is the rule under some statutory provisions defining the crime of endeavoring to incite or procure the commission of perjury;[45] a mere general attempt to induce another to swear falsely is not sufficient.[46] However, under some statutes, it has been held that the offense may be committed even though an element of the offense of perjury would not have been present.[47]

Pending proceeding. Under a statute making it an offense for a person to attempt to procure or entice another to commit perjury in any cause, matter, or proceeding, it has been held that the pendency of a proceeding is an element of the offense,[48] and under other statutes an endeavor or attempt to procure another to commit perjury in some proceeding, if the proceeding should be commenced sometime in the future, is not sufficient.[49]

[§ 198] B. Prosecution—1. Indictments and Informations—a. Subornation—(1) In General. General rules[50] apply to an indictment or information for subornation of perjury.[51] Statutes regulating indictments and informations for subornation of perjury, similar to those applicable to indictments and informations for perjury,[52] have been enacted in some jurisdictions,[53] and under such statutes and the modern rules of practice the tendency is to uphold an indictment or information in respect of the averments as to the elements of the crime if such averments are such as will inform accused of the charge which he is expected to meet.[54]

Joinder with charge of perjury. A charge of subornation against the suborner and a charge of perjury against the person suborned may be joined in the same indictment.[55]

[§ 199] (2) Averment as to Perjury. In general the indictment or information should contain the averments required in an indictment or information for perjury,[56] including averments of the essential elements of perjury.[57] In applying this rule it has been held or stated that the indictment or information should set forth, show, or describe the fact that the oath was in relation to a matter as to which an oath was required;[58] the proceeding or matter in which, or in connection with which, the alleged perjury was committed;[59] the pendency of such proceeding;[60] the jurisdiction of the proceeding or matter;[61] the court,[62] or officer,[63] in which, or before whom, the false oath was taken; the due administration of the oath;[64] the materiality[65] and the falsity[66] of the testimony or assertion; and that

Thomas, 63 Cal. 482 (where, in addition to an assertion that there was no offense denominated "attempting to suborn perjury," the court pointed out that there was nothing to indicate that subornation of perjury would have resulted if the alleged attempt had been successful).

[a] Want of materiality of testimony.—(1) A person cannot be convicted of an attempt to suborn perjury, where he has attempted to induce another to testify falsely as to a matter which was entirely immaterial to the issue in the case as then set forth in the complaint. Peo. v. Teal, 196 N. Y. 372, 89 NE 1086, 25 LRANS 120, 17 AnnCas 1175. (2) The fact that the testimony might have been material if the complaint had been amended does not affect the situation. the person who committed the perjury did knowingly[67] and willfully[68] swear or testify falsely.[69]

Sufficiency of averments. A charge for subornation is governed by the rules applicable to indictments and informations for perjury[70] in determining the sufficiency of the various averments as to the perjury.[71] Thus under modern rules of procedure matters of inducement may be pleaded in general terms,[72] and in general the averments as to the perjury are sufficient if they are in such form and in such definite and specific language as would be sufficient in an indictment for perjury.[73] The indictment need not specify the statutory provision under which the person who swore falsely was guilty of perjury.[74]

[§ 200] (3) Averment as to Acts and Intent of Suborner. It should be averred that accused procured another to commit perjury;[75] that accused knew that the testimony of the witness would be false,[76] and that accused knew that the witness knew such testimony was false;[77] and that accused knew that the witness would corruptly and willfully give the testimony.[78] It has been held, however, that the failure expressly to charge that accused knew that the witness would swear falsely does not render the indictment insufficient where equivalent words are used,[79] and that failure specifically to allege that the person who swore falsely knew when he was suborned, or, when he gave his testimony, that he was committing the crime of perjury does not render the indictment insufficient.[80]

Means of procurement. The view has been taken that it is not necessary to set forth the means of procuring or inducing the perjury,[81] but the recital of the means does not render the indictment bad.[82]

[§ 201] b. Attempts To Suborn and Incitement To Commit Perjury. While it has been held that the indictment need not particularly specify the matter to which accused attempted to procure a witness to swear,[83] according to some cases it must appear that the false swearing would have amounted to perjury;[84] and there is authority for the view that a charge based on an alleged offer of money to induce a person to commit perjury should be as specific, definite, and certain as an indictment for perjury.[85] But it has been held that a charge, under a statute making an endeavor to suborn perjury a crime, is sufficient if laid in the words of the statute,[86] and it is not necessary to aver that the prospective witness had knowledge that the testimony which it was sought to procure was false.[87] In general an indictment containing averments showing that perjury would have been committed if the attempt had been successful and also that the case is within the statutes in respect of endeavors or attempts to suborn is sufficient.[88] So under some statutes the charge is sufficient where the offense is set out with such certainty that a conviction or acquittal under it could be successfully pleaded in bar of another prosecution for the same offense.[89]

Pending proceeding. Under the wording of some statutes the charge must show that the proceeding in which the perjury was to be committed was pending,[90] and an indictment for an attempt or endeavor to incite another to commit perjury is insufficient where it shows that perjury was to be committed in

[§ 202] 2. Issues, Proof, and Variance.[92] In a prosecution for subornation, the essential elements of the crime of perjury must be proved,[93] as well as the fact that accused procured or induced the commission of perjury with the requisite knowledge and intent.[94] In a prosecution for an attempt to suborn, according to some cases, the proof must show that the attempt had reference to some particular and specified judicial proceeding.[95] Where an indictment for an attempt to induce a person, who had already given testimony on the trial of a certain case, to give a false affidavit repudiating such testimony, alleged that such testimony was true, it was held that it was necessary to prove the truth of such testimony.[96]

Matter sworn to. In a prosecution for subornation, the matter sworn to must be substantially proved as alleged.[97]

Means. Where an indictment for subornation alleges more than one way in which accused tried to induce the commission of perjury, it is sufficient to prove only one of such means.[98] According to some cases a descriptive averment as to the means used, although unnecessary, must be proved as alleged in a prosecution either for subornation[99] or for an attempt to suborn.[1]

Variance. While it has been held in a prosecution for subornation that a variance as to matters not constituting the essence of the offense is not fatal,[2] a variance as to certain descriptive matter has been regarded as fatal, although it was not necessary to allege such matter.[3]

[§ 203] 3. Evidence—a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof.[4] The general rule that a person charged with crime is presumed innocent[5] applies in a prosecution for subornation.[6] The burden of proof, under the general rule,[7] is on the state to establish the guilt of accused,[8] that is, to establish all the essential elements of the offense of subornation.[9]

[§ 204] b. Admissibility. General rules[10] govern the admissibility of evidence in prosecutions for subornation of perjury.[11] Also accused may introduce any competent evidence in rebuttal of the charge of subornation or attempt to procure false testimony.[12]

cases in general,[15] in order to convict the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of accused.[16]

[§ 206] (2) Number of Witnesses and Corroboration.[17] While there are cases which hold that a conviction for subornation of perjury may be sustained upon the testimony of a single witness without corroboration as to the commission of the perjury,[18] according to the weight of authority in a prosecution for subornation, as in a prosecution for perjury,[19] the uncorroborated testimony of a single witness is not sufficient to establish the falsity of the matter alleged as perjury,[20] as for example where the witness is the person suborned.[21] But the procuration or inducement may be established by the uncorroborated evidence of a single witness,[22] who, according to some cases, may be the suborned witness,[23] although apparently there is authority for the view that the uncorroborated testimony of the suborned witness is not sufficient.[24] In any event the testimony of the suborned witness when duly corroborated may be sufficient to support a conviction.[25]

Attempt or endeavor to suborn. In a prosecution for the statutory offense of endeavoring to incite or procure the commission of perjury, it has been held that the falsity of the proposed statement may be established by one witness,[26] but there is authority for the view that, in a prosecution for an attempt to suborn false swearing, corroboration of the testimony of the person in respect of whom the attempt was made may be required under certain conditions.[27]

[§ 207] 4. Trial. General rules in respect of the trial of criminal cases,[28] including rules as to instructions,[29] apply in prosecutions for subornation of perjury[30] and for attempts to suborn perjury.[31]

Verdict. The general rules as to the verdict in a criminal case[32] apply in a prosecution for subornation of perjury[33] or for an attempt or endeavor to induce the commission of perjury.[34]

[§ 208] 5. Punishment. Rules as to punishment similar to those applicable to prosecutions for perjury[35] apply in prosecutions for subornation of perjury and for attempts or endeavors to procure the commission of perjury.[36] At the present time in many jurisdictions the matter is regulated by statute.[37]

[a] Reason for rule that accused cannot be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of a single witness does not apply to a case of subornation of perjury, for the reason that in such case the testimony does not consist of that of one person against that of another. The testimony of each witness for the prosecution involves, it is true, the impeachment of his own former sworn testimony, but it is direct evidence against accused as to the instigation of the perjury. be tried before the conviction of the perjurer,[38] and the mere fact that an indictment against the perjurer is dismissed is not inconsistent with the guilt of the person charged with subornation.[39] But it has been held that the acquittal of the person charged with perjury entitles a person charged with suborning him to commit it, if already convicted thereof, to a new trial, since, if the testimony given was not perjury, there could not have been a subornation.[40]

VIII. CIVIL LIABILITY[41]

[By Douglas Robinson Gray]

[§ 210] A. In the Absence of Statute. There is authority that, without deciding whether or not a civil action for perjury will ever lie, merely holds that such an action will not lie where a necessary element of perjury is missing.[42] But the general rule, in the absence of statute,[43] is that no action lies to recover damages caused by perjury,[44] false swearing,[45] or subornation of perjury,[46] whether committed in the course of, or in connection with, a civil action or suit,[47] a criminal prosecution[48] or other proceeding,[49] and whether the perjurer was a party to,[50] or a witness in,[51] the proceeding.

[a] No criminal intent.—Where defendant, in a former civil suit between the parties, testified falsely as a witness therein, but the falsity was inadvertent and not intentional, an action on the case for damages would not lie because the essential element of criminal intent was absent. This was true irrespective of the general question of whether such an action would lie in any event, such question being expressly left open because not necessary to a decision of the case before the court. [a] Reason for rule is conclusiveness of judgment, "and the judgment is equally conclusive when the question arises between the same parties, whether it is declared on as the foundation of a suit, pleaded as a bar, or given in evidence to establish the point decided. It is not competent for the party in any other action to deny, or plead any thing to the contrary of what has been found and adjudicated by the judgment." Lyford v. Demerritt, 32 N. H. 234, 236. Abbott v. Bahr, 3 Pinn. (Wis.) 193, 3 Candl. 210.

[b] Poor debtor's oath.—Where a declaration alleged that a defendant lawfully committed to jail upon an execution in favor of plaintiff secured his release by perjury in connection with the poor debtor's oath, and thereby damaged plaintiff by depriving him of his lawful remedy to collect that debt, a demurrer thereto as insufficient in law should have been sustained because, in the absence of statute, such as that authorizing an action against a person for false swearing as trustee in the process of foreign attachment, no action will lie for damages caused by perjury. [§ 211] B. Under Statute—1. In General. Under a statute allowing an action to recover damages sustained through perjury resulting in a judgment against the party suing,[52] the cause of action created is the obtaining of a judgment against another by perjury of a witness.[53]

[§ 212] 2. Elements of Cause of Action. Under certain statutory provisions[54] it has been said that the elements of the tort are (1) a judgment against plaintiff,[55] (2) obtained by perjury of a witness introduced by the adverse party,[56] (3) resulting in damage to plaintiff.[57] No action will lie in the absence of an essential element.[58]

[§ 213] 3. Pleading. A complaint is bad on demurrer if it does not affirmatively set forth the essential elements of the tort,[59] such as introduction of the perjured testimony by, or on behalf of, the adverse party.[60]

PER LEGEM TERRÆ.[1]

PERMANENCY.[2] A word that carries with it the idea of something that is durable, lasting, that never changes.[3] However, in the legal acceptation of the term, it does not include the idea of absolute, but only of practical, irremediability or perpetuity.[4]

PERMANENT.[5] [§ 1] A. In General. A word of Latin derivation from per,[6] meaning through, and maneo,[7] to remain.[8] The word is a relative one, and its signification depends upon the subject matter in connection with which it is employed.[9] It is to be construed in contradistinction from "temporary,"[10] "provisional,"[11] "shifting,"[12] or tran-

[a] "Public policy, and the safe administration of justice, (1) require that witnesses, who are a necessary part of the judicial machinery, be privileged against any restraint, excepting that imposed by the penalty for perjury." Stevens v. Rowe, 59 N. H. 578, 579, 47 AmR 231. To same effect Godette v. Gaskill, 151 N. C. 52, 53, 65 SE 612, 134 AmSR 964, 24 LRANS 265; Yoder v. Cole, 232 Pa. 509, 511, 81 A 546. (2) "It would multiply and extend litigation if the matter could be re-examined by a new action between a party to the action and a witness therein; and, more than that, witnesses would be intimidated if their testimony is given under liability of themselves being subjected to the expense and annoyance of being sued by any party to the action to whom their testimony might not be agreeable. It would give a great leverage to litigants to intimidate witnesses." Godette v. Gaskill, supra [quot Yoder v. Cole, supra].

[b] Relitigation of facts.—Even though defendant in the suit for perjury was merely a witness for the adverse party in the previous case, and not himself a party to the proceedings, so that res judicata is inapplicable because of the difference in parties, nevertheless an action against such witness for perjury committed in the previous trial would necessarily involve a relitigation of the same facts, and will therefore not be permitted. Cole v. Chellis, 122 Me. 262, 265, 119 A 623.

[b] Judgment obtained by consent is not one obtained by perjury within the meaning of the statute, and therefore no action lies for perjury at proceedings resulting in a consent judgment. Cole v. Chellis, 122 Me. 262, 119 A 623.

sient."[13] "Permanent" has been defined as meaning abiding;[14] changeless;[15] constant;[16] continuing;[17] continuing in the same state, or without any change that destroys form or character;[18] durable;[19] fixed;[20] fixed or enduring in character, condition, state, position, occupation, use, or the like;[21] immovable;[22] lasting[23] or intended to last indefinitely;[24] not subject to change;[25] remaining;[26] remaining unaltered or unmoved;[27] something which lasts or endures;[28] stable;[29] without ending.[30] It has been said that, as applied to human affairs, it signifies appreciable durability and continuance, as opposed to what is merely transient,[31] and that it does not embrace the idea of absolute perpetuity.[32] Thus it has been said not to mean everlasting;[33] existing forever;[34] forever;[35] lasting forever;[36] lifelong;[37] never changing;[38] perpetual;[39] unchangeable;[40] or unending.[41]

[§ 2] B. Permanent Abode.[42] A domicile, a home, which a party is at liberty to leave, as interest or whim may dictate, but without any present intention of changing it;[43] a residence.[44]

[§ 3] C. Permanent Agent.[45] In the governmental service, an agent appointed by the president, with the advice and consent of the senate, as contradistinguished from one appointed by the head of a department, on some special occasion or service, and on such terms as such departmental head chooses to make.[46]

[§ 4] D. Permanent Culvert.[47] In Iowa, as defined by the state highway commission, any culvert exceeding thirty-six inches in diameter.[48]

[§ 5] E. Permanent Disability[49] or Incapacity.[50] An incapacity that never has and never will cease to exist;[51] an incapacity that is changeless and without ending;[52] a lasting disability which will not pass away;[53] the permanent reduction of an injured person's power to earn money, resulting from an injury caused by the negligent act of another.[54] There is also authority for the view that the phrase means a disability which, while not lasting or existing forever, exists continuously for a long period of time;[55] and this may be especially true in cases governed by statute.[56]

Similar phrases: "Permanent and total disability,"[57] "permanent total disability,"[58] "permanent total incapacity,"[59] "total and permanent disability,"[60] "total permanent disability"[61] "total permanent incapacity;"[62] also, "partial permanent, or total permanent disablement,"[63] "permanent partial disability"[64]

[a] Statement by an employer that a position would be a permanent one referred to the position itself rather than to the term of the employment, which was one at will severable by either party, in the absence of any evidence of a general custom or usage establishing a definite period of time. Milner v. Hill, 10 Oh. Cir Dec. 357, 359.

[b] "Steady and permanent employment."—"Words are to be taken in their most usual and known signification, but they get their meaning almost wholly from the time, place, and circumstances under which they are used. The words 'steady and permanent' usually signify stability and duration; and this is especially true when they are applied to the subject-matter, and the peculiar circumstances under which they are here used." Pennsylvania Co. v. Dolan, 6 Ind. A. 109, 32 NE 802, 805, 51 AmSR 289.

[c] "Permanent above any one in the house."—Where an agreement provided for the employment of one as a clerk at a monthly salary, the position to be "permanent above any one in the house," and it appeared that another clerk was employed for a year at a monthly salary, it was not error for the court to instruct the jury that a reasonable construction of the agreement for employment would be for a year. [a] A contract for permanent employment violates a statute declaring invalid contracts of employment for not terminable at the will of either party,[71] as where the matter is regulated by custom and usage,[72] or by the giving of an independent consideration other than the services contracted to be rendered.[73] Usually the term is construed to mean employment for an indefinite period which may be severed by either party,[74] where no consideration exists other than the services contracted to be rendered;[75] but where the employee gives a valuable consideration other than his services in return for the permanent employment, the term means something more than an employment for an indefinite time, and means employment as long as the employee is able, ready, and willing to perform such services as the employer may have for him to do.[76]

[§ 8] H. Permanent Loan.[77] Under a statutory definition, a loan of a permanent character which is secured by mortgages or debentures or otherwise on the assets or income of a company, and which, if subject to repayment, is subject to repayment at not less than three months' notice.[78]

[§ 9] I. Permanent Loss.[79] As used concerning the loss of an eye, limb, etc., means the taking away of the normal use of the member.[80]

[§ 10] J. Permanent Roads.[81] Roads surfaced with crushed rock, gravel, macadam, brick, concrete, asphalt-macadam, or any other hard surfacing material.[82]

[§ 11] K. Permanent Sickness.[83] The word "permanent" as so used imports a state of disability rather than an incurable sickness.[84]

[§ 12] L. Permanent Structure.[85] A structure of a durable character, intended to last indefinitely;[86] a stable and immovable structure.[87]

PERMANENTLY.[30] A derivative of "permanent," having different meanings dependent upon the subject matter and connection of its use.[31] It has been defined as meaning constantly;[32] for an indefinite period;[33] in a permanent or lasting manner;[34] so as to remain.[35] It has been said both to mean perpetually,[36] and not to mean perpetually.[37] It is used in contradistinction to temporarily,[38] and is the converse of transient [ly].[39]

[a] Such an injunction (1) would seem to be an injunction granted at the final determination of the suit (Miller v. Perkins, 165 Ga. 159, 160, 140 SE 360), (3) although it is not one having the quality of absolute perpetuity, but rather of indefiniteness, as construed in reference to the life of the subject matter (Miller v. Holmes, supra). (4) It has also been defined as an injunction which remains in force until the final termination of the suit (Riggins v. Thompson, 96 Tex. 154, 71 SW 14) (5) as distinguished from an injunction granted upon the final trial, which is called a "perpetual" injunction (Riggins v. Thompson, supra. See Injunctions § 3), (6) but this would seem to be similar to the definition of a "temporary" injunction, which is said to be an order operative usually until the final hearing of the case in which it is issued (see Temporary Injunction [37 Cyc 1798]. PERMISSION.[63] An allowance;[64] an authorization;[65] a sufferance;[66] a toleration.[67] A term which implies consent,[68] leave, or license.[69] It implies notice[70] or knowledge of the thing permitted,[71] or connotes some opportunity for knowledge.[72]

Phrases: "Permission of town,"[73] "permission to occupy . . . premises."[74]

PERMISSIVE.[75] Permitted, tolerated, suffered.[76]

Permissive use.[77] A license;[78] a license exercised in subordination to another's claim and ownership.[79]

PERMIT. [§ 1] A. As a Noun.[80] An allowance;[81] an authorization;[82] a leave;[83] a license;[84] a sufferance;[85] a toleration;[86] a warrant in writing.[87]

Phrases: "A permit to close a street to travel,"[88] "for lawful use and under government permit,"[89] "[water] permit."[90]

[§ 2] B. As a Verb.[91] Derived from the Latin word "permittere," which means to concede; to give leave; to grant.[92] It is a word of considerable elasticity. It lacks clear-cut and precise definiteness.[93] It is not a technical word, and in English it has two significations,[94] the first being where the mind consents to the act;[95] the second where the mind does not affirmatively agree to the act, but, having the right and the means to interfere to prevent it from transpiring, fails to do so.[96] It is a

96. Warberton v. Woods, 6 Mo. 8, 12 [quot Evans v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., 195 Mo. A. 438, 192 SW 112].

[a] A failure to prohibit may be said to amount to a license or permission to do a particular act; and in this sense, the word "permit" is sometimes used. But this is believed to be its secondary, rather than its primary, signification. When thus used, it implies that the party has it in his immediate power to prevent the act or thing; and having failed to prohibit the same, it may well and safely be concluded that he permitted it. Abrahams v. State, 4 Iowa 541, 543.

[b] "Permit" implies no affirmative act.—It involves no intent. It is mere passivity; abstaining from preventive action. In re Thomas, 103 Fed. 272, 274; Dorris v. McKamy, 40 Cal. A. 267, 180 P 645, 649. See Aull v. Columbia, etc., R. Co., 42 S. C. 431, 436, 20 SE 302.

[d] Mere passive nonresistance by an insolvent debtor to a suit brought by a creditor is not "suffering or permitting" a creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, within the meaning of a bankruptcy word, therefore, ordinarily implying knowledge[97] and consent,[98] although such rule is not without exceptions.[99] Its various definitions have been given as follows: Not to hinder;[1] not to prohibit or prevent;[2] to abstain from taking preventive action;[3] to acquiesce in;[4] to allow[5] expressly[6] or knowingly;[7] to allow after notice or knowledge;[8] to allow by not prohibiting;[9] to allow by tacit consent, or act. In re Ogles, 93 Fed. 426, 434.

[e] Where it was not within the power of an insolvent debtor to defeat a preference, he cannot be said to have "suffered or permitted" it within the meaning of a bankruptcy act. In re Nelson, 98 Fed. 76, 77.

[a] Knowledge express or implied is necessary to show that the owner of a building violated an injunction against "permitting" the sale of liquor in the building. Sawyer v. Mould, 144 Iowa 185, 122 NW 813, 814, 25 LRANS 602.

[b] Used in a statute against gambling, the word implies knowledge on the part of the one in control of the house in which the gambling took place. Stuart v. State, (Tex. Cr.) 60 SW 554. To same effect State v. Cure, 7 Iowa 479, 481; Lancaster Hotel Co. v. Com., 149 Ky. 443, 149 SW 942, 943; Bunnell v. Com., 99 SW 237, 238, 30 KyL 491.

[c] Used in a statute against working employees overtime it implies that the employer, in order to be guilty of violating the statute, had knowledge that the employees worked overtime. MacFarlane v. Mosier, 79 Misc. 460, 141 NYS 143, 148. Compare U. S. v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 249 Fed. 464, 466, 161 CCA 422 (where it was held that a railroad company, which failed to see that an agent did not remain on duty for an excess period, "permitted" the employee to perform the excess service in violation of a statute); Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 240 Fed. 315, 317, 319, 153 CCA 241 (where it was said that the knowledge of the employee that he is exceeding the authorized hours is notice to the employer railroad); U. S. v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 228 Fed. 561, 562, 563; U. S. v. Oregon-Washington R., etc., Co., 213 Fed. 688, 690 (where it was pointed out, however, that the statute in question provided that the employer railroad "shall be deemed to have had knowledge, etc."); Perkins v. State, 80 Tex. Cr. 416, 190 SW 168, 169 (where it was said that the word "permit" in the sense in which it was used in the statute pertained to the authority or control of the employer or contractor over the employee or laborer; the word did not apply generally to any man who might have knowledge that the employee was working overtime).

[d] Used in a statute regarding billiard playing by minors (1) the owner of the billiard table must know that the player is a minor in order to be guilty of an offense. Com. v. Wills, 121 Ky. 103, 89 SW 144, 28 KyL 77. (2) However, the view seems also adopted that the mere fact that a minor plays imputes knowledge to the owner and renders him guilty of "permitting" a minor to play. State v. Schnables, 109 Ark. 429, 160 SW 388, 389; State v. Probasco, 62 Iowa 400, 17 NW 607; Com. v. Emmons, 98 Mass. 6.

[e] One not shown to have known of the presence of a drunken person on his "licensed premises" cannot be convicted of "permitting" drunkenness to take place there. Somerset v. Wade, [1894] 1 Q. B. 574, 576.

[a] As used in an ordinance it implied at least acquiescence; passivity; abstaining from preventive action. Caspers v. Anglo-American Provision Co., 159 Ill. A. 573, 575. Acquiescence see 1 C. J. p 905.

[b] In a statute against gaming it means giving consent thereto, or having knowledge thereof. Stuart v. State, (Tex. Cr.) 60 SW 554 [quot Bunnell v. Com., 99 SW 237, 238, 30 KyL 491].

[c] Affirmative assent is necessary on the part of a landlord to render him guilty of "permitting" a tenant to use the premises for an illegal purpose. I. DEFINITIONS

[§ 1] Some confusion has arisen in the law through the use by the courts of the word "perpetuity" with two inconsistent meanings.[1] The term has sometimes been considered, in its common meaning of a perpetual or unreasonable continuance of an existing status,[2] to have reference to an indestructible and inalienable estate or interest,[3] and has been defined as any limitation tending to take the subject of it out of commerce for a longer period than permitted by law,[4] or "an estate inalienable, though all mankind join in the conveyance."[5] In its technical signification,[6] however, a perpetuity is any limitation by which the vesting of an estate or interest is unlawfully postponed,[7] or, more exactly,[8] a future limitation, whether executory or by way of remainder, and of either real or personal property, which is not to vest until after the expiration of, or will not necessarily vest within, the period fixed and prescribed by law for the creation of future estates and interests, and which is not destructible by the person for the time being entitled to the property subject to the future limitation, except with the concurrence of the individual interested under that limitation.[9] It is only with this latter meaning that the word is properly applied to future interests in property.[10]

Herrick, 19 R. I. 197, 32 A 913 (in all of which the courts apparently confuse the unreasonable continuance of an estate with the doctrine prohibiting remoteness in the vesting of an estate).

2. See Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Houston, (Tex. Civ. A.) 110 SW 973 (where the term is used in that sense); cases infra this note; infra § 19 text and note 42; and § 76.

[a] As commonly understood (1) although not technically exact, a "perpetuity" is something which may last forever, and the rule against perpetuities is a rule that prevents certain existing conditions from continuing for an indefinite period. Daughters of Republic of Texas, (Civ. A.) 151 SW 877 [rev on other grounds 106 Tex. 80, 156 SW 197, 157 SW 937] (where the court apparently used the term as meaning an indestructible interest or one which might continue forever). Perpetuities are so denominated not because the limitation, as written, would actually make them perpetual, but because they transgress the limits which the law has set in restraint of grants that tend to a perpetual suspense of the title or of its vesting.[11]

II. THE RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES

[§ 2] A. Introductory Statement. The rule against perpetuities is a restriction upon the jus disponendi of property,[12] and is by far the most important restraint which the law places upon the right to create future interests.[13] Whether a limitation of an interest or estate is void for remoteness depends upon whether it violates that rule.[14] Founded upon the public policy which disapproves the total exclusion of property from social commerce for long periods of time,[15] the rule is aimed against the unreasonable continuance of that sort of indirect restraint on alienation which is accomplished by the creation of future interests,[16] and its purpose is to cut out the limitations which, if allowed to take effect, would produce the consequences desired to be avoided.[17] The rule is in force in all of the states in which the common law prevails, except where modified or superseded by statute,[18] and is the same both at law and in equity.[19]

"Rule against remoteness." It has sometimes been said that, in order to avoid ambiguity and to express more clearly the nature of the rule against perpetuities, it should more properly be designated the "rule against remoteness."[20] rule. Primarily a perpetuity is 'an inalienable, indestructible interest.' Secondarily, it is 'an interest which will not vest till a remote period.' The latter is the true meaning of the word when used in reference to the Rule against Perpetuities." Remsen Wills p 192.

It may be said, nevertheless, that fundamentally the object of both rules is to prevent perpetuities, the tieing up of estates and the suspension of their free and full conveyance for long and indefinite periods of time, by directly suspending the power to alienate, in the one instance, and by holding up the investiture of a future estate in real property in the other." "The rule against perpetuities . . . is less frequently but more expressively termed, the rule against remoteness." Bancroft v. Maine State Sanatorium Assoc., 119 Me. 56, 62, 109 A 585.

"It ought to have been called the Rule against Remoteness; in the old books 'perpetuity' means an inalienable interest and (more especially) a disposition by which land is settled on unborn descendants ad infinitum, so as to be inalienable. The two ideas of 'remoteness' and 'perpetuity' are constantly confused at the present day." 19 Mich. L. Rev. pp 235, 242 note (article by Rundell) [quot 18 Juridical Rev. p 132 (article by Sweet)].

"Had the name ['rule respecting remoteness'] been given the rule at its birth much confusion would have been avoided. As it was the rule went along increasing in stature and in favor with God and man but without a name so that its identity was sometimes in doubt until in some way

Prohibitions of, and restraints upon, alienation. The rule against perpetuities and the rules of law disfavoring or avoiding prohibitions of, or restrictions upon, the alienation of property[21] are separate and distinct, and must not be confused.[22] While their purposes are similar, in that both are aimed against the withdrawal of property from commerce,[23] they accomplish their ends by different means;[24] the latter rules directly and the former indirectly.[25] On account of the similarity of objects, the courts have sometimes adopted the period specified by the rule against perpetuities as a reasonable period for which the power of alienation may be restricted, where such restriction is otherwise valid;[26] but the mere fact that the period for which alienation is prohibited or restricted is not greater than that prescribed by the rule against perpetuities will not validate a prohibition or restriction which is unreasonable or so general as to be contrary to public policy.[27] In some jurisdictions, however, statutes, sometimes referred to as statutes against perpetuities, prescribe a period within, but not beyond, which the power of alienation may be suspended.[28]

The statutes of mortmain,[29] while often referred to by the courts, in connection with discussions of the rule against perpetuities, as one of the limitations upon the right to dispose of property, merely prohibit the holding of real property by a corporation without special authority so to do, and therefore have no connection with "perpetuities," as the term is used in its technical sense, although they were enacted for the purpose of preventing corporations, by means of their continuing existence, from holding large properties in perpetuity.[30]

Postponement of, and restraints upon, enjoyment. The general rule, obtaining in some jurisdictions, that it is against public policy to postpone one's possession or enjoyment of property in which no one but himself has any interest[31] has no connection with the rule against perpetuities,[32] which is not concerned with possession or enjoyment.[33] It has been suggested, however, that the period specified by the rule against perpetuities may be adopted, by analogy, as a reasonable period beyond which such a postponement or restraint, otherwise valid, will not be permitted to extend.[34]

[§ 3] B. Origin and Development. The rule against perpetuities took form in England in the discussion of cases arising on executory devises of chattels real,[35] and first was suggested at the bar in 1616,[36] although the word "perpetuity" had appeared in the reports as early as 1595.[37] At first the validity of contingent interests was made to de-

the rather inapt name of the rule against perpetuities became attached to it. A name acquired in this haphazard way, however, is not so easily lost and is likely to remain its customary name in the future. The accurate characterization of the rule as the 'rule respecting remoteness' is of great value, however, by whatever name the rule be called." 10 Iowa L. Bul. pp 275, 276 (article by Bordwell).

"This rule of restraint upon alienation has frequently been confounded with the rule against perpetuities. They are, however, separate and distinct rules, although their object is one and the same,—the prevention of property being taken out of commerce, locked up, or so held that it cannot be conveyed. It is important therefore in the consideration of cases to bear in mind that the two rules are independent and distinct." Pulitzer v. Livingston, supra.

"There are undoubtedly principles of public policy which cause courts to scrutinize with care efforts to impose restraints upon the alienation of property. The refusal to sanction such restraints has often been attributed to the rule against perpetuities and in fact legislation in many of the States, adopted in supposed modification of that rule, in terms forbids restraints upon alienation. . . . The rule against perpetuities and that against restraints upon alienation are in reality entirely distinct, the former being concerned only with the vesting of estates in right, and the latter with the limitation which may be imposed upon the enjoyment of the property." pend upon the nature of the contingency upon which they were limited to take effect, and no question as to the remoteness of a limitation of a freehold estate arose until 1664.[38] The foundation of the modern rule against perpetuities is the Duke of Norfolk's case, decided in 1685, by which were established the points: (1) That the validity or invalidity of a future interest depended upon its remoteness, and not on the nature of the contingency. (2) That a future interest might be limited to commence on any contingency which must occur within lives in being.[39] Subsequently, the limits within which the contingency must occur were extended to cover the time necessary for the birth of a posthumous child, where gestation actually occurs, as every life is to be considered as beginning at the time of conception;[40] then twenty-one years were added to provide for the minority of children in esse at the expiration of the life estate.[41] At a later date the consideration of minority was lost sight of, and the period of twenty-one years was allowed in gross, without reference to the existence of a minority.[42] The rule was developed entirely by judicial decision,[43] although since declared or changed by statute in many jurisdictions.

Wms. 421, 24 Reprint 796 (all holding that a limitation over to third persons, to take effect if the children of living persons should die before attaining their majority, was good).

[a] Reason for rule.—(1) It was said that, inasmuch as an infant could not, in any event, alienate his property, the power of alienation over it is restrained no longer by creating a future interest in favor of an unborn person when he reaches his majority than by creating it in favor of an unborn person immediately upon his birth. Stephens v. Stephens, Cas. t. Talb. 228, 25 Reprint 751; Marlborough v. Godolphin, 1 Eden 404, 28 Reprint 741. (2) But later cases, holding good a limitation over to third persons, to take effect if the children of living persons should die before attaining their majority, apparently overlooked the fact that this reasoning did not apply. [a] Leading case.—The decision that the term of twenty-one years may be allowed in gross and without reference to the infancy of some person interested in the estate was first definitely made in Cadell v. Palmer, 10 Bing. 140, 25 ECL 73, 131 Reprint 859, 7 Bligh N. S. 202, 5 Reprint 745, 1 Cl. & F. 372, 6 Reprint 956, 21 ERC 100 (which "is identified, in the tradition of the Chancery Bar, with the suit of Jarndyce v. Jarndyce in Dickens' well-known description of the procedure of the old Court of Chancery." 21 ERC 129).

[b] Origin and development of twenty-one year period.—(1) Limitations over to third persons to take effect a certain number of years, not more than twenty-one, after the death of living persons were at first supported on the idea that a "reasonable time" after lives in being might well be allowed. Toms v. Williams, 41 Mich. 552, 2 NW 814; Marks v. Marks, 10 Mod. 419, 88 Reprint 789; Loyd v. Carew, Prec. Ch. 72, 24 Reprint 35. Compare Stanley v. Leigh, 2 P. Wms 686, 24 Reprint 917 (where a "short or reasonable time" after lives in being is stated to be the period within which an estate must become alienable). (2) "It was while the courts were in doubt and uncertainty about the proper limitation, and the rule was fluctuating and unsettled, that some of the cases speak of a reasonable term of years." Hawley v. James, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 61, 170. (3) Thereafter twenty-one years became accepted as the extent of this reasonable time. Goodman v. Goodright, 2 Burr. 873, 97 Reprint 608; Jee v. Audley, 1 Cox Ch. 324, 29 Reprint 1186; Marlborough v. Godolphin, 1 Eden 404, 28 Reprint 741; Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. Jr. 227, 31 Reprint 117 [aff 11 Ves. Jr. 112, 32 Reprint 1030, 1 ERC 498]. (4) "This limit of time within which an executory interest must take effect, was no doubt suggested by the fact that an estate tail, according to the English law, could not be made inalienable for any longer period. For example, A would settle his lands to himself for life, remainder to his eldest son, remainder to his second son in tail male, remainders over. Since an estate tail could be barred by common recovery, A in settling his estate in this manner, could only make the lands inalienable until the eldest son was born, and became of age. It would, therefore, at the farthest remain inalienable during his life and twenty-one years thereafter, viz., a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years; to this was added the nine months required for the gestation of a child en ventre sa mere, when posthumous children were declared capable of taking future estates." Hayes v. Martz, 173 Ind. 279, 282, 89 NE 303, 90 NE 309. See Ferguson v. Ferguson, 39 U. C. Q. B. 232 [app allowed on other grounds 1 Ont. A. 452 (app allowed on other grounds 2 Can. S. C. 497)] (to same effect). But compare Dungannon v. Smith, 12 Cl. & F. 546, 629, 8 Reprint 1523 (where it was said by Lord Brougham that "the rule of law is the term in gross of twenty-one years after the life or lives in being . . . I have a strong opinion, which I believe is joined in by the profession at large, that it arises out of an accidental circumstance, out of a confusion, I may say, a misapprehension in confounding together the nature of the estate with the remedy at law by fine and recovery, which could not be applied till a certain life came to twenty-one years; but still that has become inveterate"). And see Gray Perp. § 187 (to same effect). (5) "The law never meant to give a further term of twenty-one years, much less any period of gestation. The law never meant to say that there shall be twenty-one years added to the life or lives in being, and that within those limits you may entail the estate, but what the law meant to say was this: until the heir of the last of the lives in being attains twenty-one, by law a recovery cannot be suffered, and consequently the discontinuance of the estate cannot be effected, and for that reason, says the law, you shall have the twenty-one years added, because that is the fact and not the law, namely, that till a person reached the age of twenty-one he could not cut off the entail. For that reason and in that way it has crept in by degrees: Communis error facit jus." Cole v. Sewell, 2 H. L. Cas. 186, 233, 9 Reprint 1062 [aff 4 Dr. & War. 1].

ute in some jurisdictions,[44] and has been gradually established by the courts,[45] having its support in the practical needs of modern times.[46]

[§ 4] C. The Rule at Common Law—1. Rule Stated. The rule against perpetuities, at common law, is that no interest within its scope[47] is good unless it must vest, if at all, not later than twenty-one years after some life in being at the creation of the interest,[48] to which is added the period of gestation if gestation exists.[49] It has been well said that, while the rule is not complicated or difficult to understand,[50] it, like most general rules, is often found difficult to apply to the facts of a particular case;[51] and justification for such statement amply appears in the cases decided by the courts throughout the whole period since the establishment of the rule.[52]

[§ 5] 2. Period of Postponement of Vesting[53]—a. In General. The period within which an estate or interest, to be good, must vest, or for which its vesting may be postponed, in the absence of statute, is, as stated by the rule against perpetuities,[54] that of a life or lives in being[55] at the time of the cre-

[a] "The reasons of the rule [against perpetuities] are not fully stated in the authorities. Its application may require a wide view of public policy, including the legal nature and design of property, the reasonable extent of an owner's posthumous control, and the economic and moral effects of realty and personalty being largely held in trusts of long duration for mere accumulation, or for purposes of entailment. Divers evils could be materially increased and unduly perpetuated if the law allowed long-continued accumulations of estates in trust for future private use, or appropriations to maintain grantees or legatees, and their heirs, forever or for many generations, without effort or care on their part, and without ability to waste or lose the capital devoted to their support." within such period.[59]

When lives in being form no part of the period of suspension or postponement of vesting, the limit of time under the rule against perpetuities is twenty-one years.[60]

"As long as legally possible." When a trust or estate for the benefit of designated persons then living is limited to continue "for as long a period as is legally possible," or an equivalent provision is made, it appears that the courts will consider the lives of the designated persons as those intended to be selected, and will uphold the interest or estate for the period of twenty-one years after the death (Md.) 232, 239 (holding that an executory bequest of a male slave upon condition that the first taker should die without heirs of his body, was not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, the court saying that although, in general, a limitation over upon failure of issue is too remote, "in this case, the subject of the bequest, the thing given, is a negro man, a life in being, and the limitation over could never by possibility take effect but in his life-time. May it not therefore be a reasonable construction to confine it to a failure of issue during a life in being, the life-time of the negro man himself, the subject of the bequest?") But see Matthews v. Daniel, 5 N. C. 42 (where a contrary conclusion was reached).

[b] "At the expiration" of twenty-one years after a life estate.—A bequest to be paid over to and vesting in the ultimate takers at the expiration of lives in being at the creation of the interest does not direct payment "after" the expiration of the period permitted by the rule against perpetuities, and therefore is not void for remoteness. [§ 6] b. Lives in Being. Where not otherwise provided by statute, there is no limitation on the number of lives in being upon which an estate may be limited or its vesting postponed, without violating the rule against perpetuities,[62] so long as "the candles are all burning at the same time,"[63] for the life of the survivor is but a single life.[64] While the persons upon whose lives an estate is limited must be selected by the instrument creating or granting it,[65] they need not be specifically named, provided they can be ascertained;[66] but they must be ascertainable and capable of being distinguished,[67] and it has been suggested that the fact of the death of the last survivor must be capable of being made out by reasonable evidence.[68] The selected lives need not be those of persons having an interest in the

[b] Death of last survivor of lineal descendants of Queen Victoria living at creation of estate.—A postponement of vesting for a period "ending at the expiration of 20 years from the day of the death of the last survivor of all the lineal descendants of Her Late Majesty Queen Victoria who shall be living at the time of" the testator's death is not void for remoteness, it being impossible to say it will be impracticable, having regard to the legal testimony probably available to ascertain the expiration of the period, although difficult questions arise, as for example, whether the children of the late tsaritsa of Russia are living; but the court said: "If I could have seen my way to hold this tying up invalid I would gladly have done so, but in my opinion I am not at liberty to do so." In re Villar, [1928] Ch. 471, 478.

[c] Leading case.—The great case of Thellusson v. Woodford (1798) involved a testamentary provision that certain property should be paid over upon the death of all the testator's sons, grandsons, and great-grandchildren, who were living at his death. Nine persons came within the classes designated. The house of lords, on the unanimous opinion of the judges, held the limitation over to be good. Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. Jr. 227, 31 Reprint 117 [aff 11 Ves. Jr. 112, 32 Reprint 1030, 1 ERC 498].

[d] Basis of the rule.—(1) Before the Duke of Norfolk's case it had been held that a term might be limited for successive life interests to any number of persons so long as they were all in being at its creation. (2) There is, however, an obiter dictum in a later case that the time allowed for executory devises ought not to be longer than the life of one person in being. Luddington v. Kime, 1 Ld. Raym. 203, 91 Reprint 1031 (per Treby, C. J.).

[e] In Georgia it is provided by Civ. Code § 3102, now Park Code Annot. (1914) § 3678, that "limitations of estates may extend to any number of lives in being at the time when the limitations commence, and twenty one years, and the usual period of gestation added thereafter." [a] Rule applied.—Where a testator established a trust for the payment of certain annuities, to continue as long as legally possible, and then to be distributed, without naming the persons whose lives he selected for the limitation of the trust, the court held that, in view of the provisions for the annuitants mentioned in the will and their heirs, and the provision for ultimate distribution of the corpus, "the inference, we think, is very strong that the lives selected were the lives of the annuitants. A reading of the will fails to suggest any other set of lives that the testator could reasonably be supposed to have intended. The inference that he intended these lives is almost conclusive." See In re Villar, [1928] Ch. 471 (where the question was discussed); Pownall v. Graham, 33 Beav. 242, 246, 55 Reprint 360 (where a trust of property, bequeathed to the survivor of the testator's brothers for life, and after his death the income to be applied as directed, and "after the law . . . admits of no further division" the property to be conveyed to a designated person, was held to expire twenty-one years after the death of the surviving brother, for, while the law would permit the trust to continue so long as any person living at the moment of the testator's death was in existence, and twenty-one years thereafter, "it would be impossible to ascertain when that period would cease," and therefore the trust could not be given effect). Compare In re Moore, [1901] 1 Ch. 936 (where the court held, of a trust term measured by the life of the survivor of all persons living at the date of the testator's death, that it would be impossible to ascertain when the last life would be extinguished).

"When such cases occur [that the individuals named compose very large bodies of men, or very extensive descriptions are made use of], they will, according to their respective circumstances, be put to the usual test, whether they will or will not tend to a perpetuity, by rendering it almost, if not quite, impracticable to ascertain the extinction of the lives described; and will be supported or avoided accordingly." other hand, more than one period of gestation may be added in computing such time if it is in fact taking place.[81] It would, therefore, seem more accurate to say that, in computing the time within which future interests must vest, or for which their vesting may be postponed, periods of gestation are excluded.[82]

[§ 8] d. Date of Commencement of Period. The period within which an estate or interest must vest or for which its vesting may be postponed, being stated by the rule against perpetuities[83] with reference to the creation of the interest,[84] commences, in the case of creation by deed, at the date of the delivery of the deed,[85] and, in the case of creation by will, at the death of the testator,[86] and not at the date of the instrument.[87]

III. REQUIREMENTS OF THE RULE

[§ 9] A. Vesting[88]—1. Necessity of Vesting within Permitted Period—a. In General—(1) Rule Stated. To satisfy the requirements of the rule against perpetuities an interest or estate must be so limited that it will necessarily and in all possible contingencies vest,[89] if at all, within the limits thereby prescribed,[90] except where it is limited upon alternative contingencies, one of which will cause it to effect of the decision in Cadell v. Palmer, supra).

"Upon the . . . [question] . . . whether a limitation by way of executory devise is void, as too remote, or otherwise, if it is not to take effect until after the determination of a life or lives in being, and upon the expiration of a term of twenty-one years afterwards, together with the number of months equal to the ordinary or longest period of gestation, but the whole of such years and months to be taken as a term in gross, and without reference to the infancy of any person whatever, born or en ventre sa mere—the unanimous opinion of the judges is, that such a limitation would be void, as too remote. They consider twenty-one years as the limit, and the period of gestation to be allowed in those cases only in which the gestation exists." Cadell v. Palmer, supra.

B died during N's lifetime, and on the death of N the trust fund became a part of B's residuary estate. It was held that the trust deed took effect upon its delivery, and the will upon the death of the testator, and therefore the deed and the will were not to be construed together, there being nothing to show they were executed in furtherance of a scheme to tie up the trust fund for a longer period than that permitted by law; so that the resulting suspension of the absolute ownership of the fund for the lifetime of N, the lifetime of the wife, and the lifetime of one of the other children, was not a perpetuity in contravention of the Personal Property Law prohibiting suspension of absolute ownership during more than two lives in being. "The rule of law is that the limitation must be good on the face of the will, so that any lawyer taking up so;[96] the validity of a limitation is accordingly to be determined under the circumstances then existing,[97] and the certainty that it will vest within the permitted period, if at all, must be discernible at that date.[98]

Circumstances existing at creation distinguished. While the validity of a future estate is determined by possible contingencies, and not by actual happenings after its creation,[99] a limitation of an estate which, under the particular circumstances existing at the creation of the estate, will necessarily vest, if ever, within the period of the rule against perpetuities is not obnoxious to the rule because under other circumstances a possibility of remoteness would have existed.[1]

[§ 11] (3) Possibility of Nonvesting. It is not sufficient that a future interest may or probably will vest within the limits of the rule against perpetuities,[2] nor, on the other hand, is it necessary, in order to call for the application of the rule, that it will

the will, without enquiring into the circumstances, could ask himself the question, 'Is that a limitation good upon the face of it, or is it bad?' and if it is a limitation which may, under any circumstances, exceed the life in being, and twenty-one years after, it is bad." "The law only looks to the situation at the time of the testator's death, to determine the effect of a will. A will may, therefore, be in violation of the statute against perpetuities when executed, and be void for that reason, when applied to the conditions then existing, but events may happen, before the death of the testator, that will remove all such objectionable features, and the estate created by the will at the death of the testator be valid." [a] Illustrations.—(1) A testatrix bequeathed property to her son for life, and on his death to his widow and children, if any, during their lives, and upon their death, to a religious society. The son died unmarried, after which the testatrix executed a codicil confirming the will, and died. As against the objection that the bequest to the religious society was void for remoteness, since the son might have left children not in being at the death of the testatrix, it was held that the will spoke from the time of the death of the testatrix, and the objection of remoteness had been removed, especially in view of the codicil, which gave the will the same effect as if it had been executed after the death of the son. Hosea v. Jacobs, 98 Mass. 65. (2) Where a testator devised property in trust to his widow for life, with secondary life estates separately to the children of testator's brother who was living at the widow's death, with remainder to their children, the final remainder was valid as to those children of secondary life tenants who were living at the death of the testator. Turner v. Safe Deposit, etc., Co., 148 Md. 371, 129 A 294. (3) A gift of property in trust for such of the testator's daughters as should survive him and attain the age of twenty-four is not void for remoteness where his youngest daughter was more than three years old at the time of his death. Von Brockdorff v. Malcolm, 30 Ch. D. 172. (4) Property was bequeathed in trust for F R for life, and after his death to those of his children living at his death who should have attained or should live to attain the age of twenty-five. The testator died in 1845, and F R in 1846, leaving three children, born respectively in 1823, 1824, and 1827. [a] Gift to executors or trustees upon probate of will.—(1) A will appointing executors and trustees "to whom, on the admission of this will to probate, the title and ownership of my said property rights . . . shall go, in trust," violates the rule against perpetuities, for the vesting of the title is postponed until the probate of the will, which might never happen. Miller v. Weston, 67 Colo. 534, 537, 189 P 610 [aff 25 Colo. A. 231, 138 P 424, and withdrawing former op. 61 Colo. 588, 157 P 1161]. (2) A gift by a testatrix, to the executor of her will, of property to be held "from and after the date of the probate of this will," creates a perpetuity, for "whatever interest the executor took under it could not vest in him until the probate of the will, and while this event would, in the ordinary and usual course of events, probably occur within a few months, or at most a few years, after the death of the testatrix, yet it cannot be said that it is a condition that must inevitably happen within twenty-one years from the death of the testatrix." Williams, 172 Ill. A. 630 (in all of which the language of the will was held not to relate the vesting to the time of probate). (3) It has been held, however, that a will providing that upon the settlement of the accounts of the executor property of the estate should be paid over to a trustee, to be held by him "for the following fourteen years from the time he receives said funds from the executor," and then to be distributed, did not create a perpetuity, the court saying that the estate of a decedent is ordinarily settled within one or two years, taking into consideration the respective times provided by statute for the doing of the necessary acts and proceedings, and that in effect the fourteen-year period was to commence at the expiration of such time after the testator's death as would be reasonably sufficient for the settlement of his estate, and that the court could not presume that such settlement would or could be longer delayed. "Where a limitation is to arise upon an alternative event, one branch of which is within and the other is not within the prescribed limits, it will take effect or not, ac-

hereinabove stated can be applied, however, only where contingencies are stated in the alternative by the instrument creating the interest or estate;[8] and where a limitation is upon one contingency, although depending upon a twofold event, the court will not split it up into two contingencies, one good and one bad, so as to give effect to the limitation on the ground that the good contingency has taken place,[9] except where a limitation was capable of taking effect under some circumstances as a remainder, in which case it would vest within the period of the rule, and under other circumstances as an executory devise, in which case it would be too remote, and the former contingency has happened,[10] and except where personal property is limited to a series of persons by words which, if the property were realty, would create successive estates tail, and the first donee does not come into being, in which case the limitation is so far regarded as separable as to permit the next donee to take.[11]

[§ 13] 2. Ascertainment of Beneficiaries.[12] The principle that the contingency on which vesting of an estate or interest is to occur must necessarily happen, if ever, within the period specified by the rule against perpetuities[13] is equally applicable to the identification of the person who is to take the estate.[14] The rule does not demand that the particular individuals in whom a future estate is to vest shall be ascertainable at the creation of the estate,[15] and it is satisfied if it be certain that they will be definitely ascertainable within the period by it specified;[16] but where the beneficiary or beneficiaries of a limitation may possibly not be ascertained within such period, the gift is void for remoteness.[17]

[§ 14] 3. Ascertainment of Interests. In accordance with the principle that in order to be valid a cording to the event." Quinlan v. Wickman, 233 Ill. 39, 46, 84 NE 38, 17 LRANS 216.

[a] Reason for rule.—"In the creation of a limitation of this kind two events are contemplated, distinct from each other, on either of which the gift is intended to take effect, and the remoteness of one of which, therefore, does not affect the validity of the other, in case it should be actually realized; and it so far differs from all other limitations, in the construction to be put upon it, in reference to the laws of remoteness, that its validity depends entirely on subsequent events. The rule allowing such an exception seems to be founded upon the consideration that it is absolutely certain, at the time of the creation of the limitation to which it applies, that if it take effect at all it must take effect within the prescribed limits, and is consequently exempt from all objection on the ground of remoteness." Armstrong v. Armstrong, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 269, 280.

To same effect Swain v. Bowers, (Ind. A.) 158 NE 598. Compare In re Daveron, [1893] 3 Ch. 421, 424 (where the court found as a fact "that the objects of the testator's bounty could all be ascertained within the limits required by the rule against perpetuities").

[a] Illustration.—A limitation of property to the testator's grandchildren surviving at the time when encumbrances upon the property should be paid off and discharged by the accumulation of the rentals is void for remoteness; for while the limits of the class to take the property will necessarily be determined within lives in being (those of the testator's children) and the period of gestation thereafter, the encumbrances may not be paid off within such lives and twenty-one years thereafter, and therefore the class or individuals to take may not be ascertained within such period. "The rule against perpetuities requires, in my view, the ascertainment within the period not only of the extreme limits of the class of persons who may take, but of the very persons who are to take, and that because the rule is aimed at the practical object of telling who can deal with the property, and if you cannot tell who are entitled to the property, but only who may become entitled to the property, the property is practically future interest or estate must necessarily vest within the period of the rule against perpetuities,[18] a gift or limitation is void unless the interests to be taken by the respective beneficiaries thereunder are capable of ascertainment within, or at the expiration of, such period.[19]

[§ 15] 4. Possibility of Issue.[20] In determining whether an estate or interest may possibly[21] vest beyond the expiration of the period specified by the rule against perpetuities,[22] both men[23] and women[24] are considered capable of having issue so long as they live.

[§ 16] B. Possession or Enjoyment.[25] The rule against perpetuities, by its terms,[26] relates solely to the vesting of estates or interests and is not concerned with their possession or enjoyment;[27] so if a legal or equitable interest or estate in real or personal property is vested or must vest within the period prescribed by the rule,[28] the postponement of the actual possession or enjoyment beyond such period does not render the estate void for remoteness,[29] although such postponement may be obnoxious to othtied up." Blight v. Hartnoll, 19 Ch. D. 294, 300.

[b] Failure of beneficiaries; principle distinguished.—When there is a gift to one for life with remainder over to a class, "if there should be no member of the class upon which the gift was to take effect in existence at the time of the death of the life tenant, the gift to the class would fail and the estate would vest in the heirs-at-law, not because of the rule against perpetuities but because there would be no member of the class." er rules of law.[30]

The time required to convert realty into personalty, where such conversion is directed, will not render an otherwise valid limitation void for remoteness, since it postpones only the possession and not the vesting of the beneficial interest.[31]

[§ 17] C. Continuance and Termination. The rule against perpetuities, as appears by its statement,[32] relates only to the vesting of estates and interests, and not to their duration or ending.[33] Consequently, if an estate must vest, if ever, within the period specified by the rule,[34] it is immaterial, on the question of remoteness, how long it continues[35] or when, if ever, it terminates;[36] and it

Klingman v. Gilbert, 90 Kan. 545, 135 P 682. (2) A provision in a will postponing the distribution of the residue of the testator's estate until after the payment of his debt does not violate the rule. Canda v. Canda, 92 N. J. None of these limitations will be obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities. A, B, C, and D take immediate vested interests, and can between them dispose of the entire fee-simple of the lands at any time. IV. INTERESTS SUBJECT TO THE RULE

[§ 18] A. Scope of the Rule. There is some confusion among the authorities as to the meaning and scope of the rule against perpetuities.[38] According to the earlier and narrower view, a violation of the rule occurs only when the situation of the property is such that no one can sell or convey it until after the lapse of the period provided by law;[39] or, in other words, no future estate which can be released is too remote under the rule.[40] This view is based upon the erroneous[41] theory of the rule against perpetuities as a prohibition of restrictions which suspend the power of alienation beyond the period specified by the rule;[42] but the statutes of several of the states relating to perpetuities are founded upon it.[43] It was later held, more broadly, that a future interest is too remote, notwithstanding the holders of the respective rights have it within their power to combine them and convey the property, if it may not vest within the period fixed by the rule;[44] and this view has been adopted in England[45] and in a number

"The remoteness against which the rule is directed is remoteness in the commencement, or first taking effect of limitations, and not in the cesser or determination of them." Bender v. Bender, supra.

"A perpetuity which the Law would deem void, must be an estate so settled for private uses that by the very terms of its creation there is no potestas alienandi in the owner." Griffin v. Graham, 8 N. C. 96, 131, 9 AmD 619.

[a] Illustrations.—(1) A testator devised and bequeathed property to the bishop of a specified diocese, "and to his successors in the bishopric of said diocese," to be disposed of and used by him to the advantage of the church therein. In an appeal from a judgment denying probate of the will, the court said: "The illegality asserted is that the clause quoted creates a perpetuity. But we cannot read that clause in any manner even implying the slightest restraint on alienation, and it is only an undue restraint on alienation which creates a forbidden perpetuity. The grant to the present bishop and his successors is a limitation of the estate. It does not create estates in remainder to the various successors. Moreover there is an express grant of the power of alienation." Lamb v. Lynch, 56 Nebr. 135, 136, 76 NW 428. (2) A conveyance of real estate which recites that the grantor has laid out the property conveyed and adjacent property into building lots and imposed building restrictions thereon, and which in terms provides that after twenty-five years from the date of the deed such restrictions may be removed by consent of a majority of the then owners of the lots, is not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities. "There is nothing in the deed restricting the owners of all these lots from at any time, by consent of all, removing them [the restrictions]. Hence an estate in perepetuity is not created by the deed." Noel v. Hill, 158 Mo. A. 426, 443, 138 SW 364.

McMath, 153 Ark. 506, 241 SW 3 (where the court appears to have applied the principle stated in the text); Stevens v. Annex Realty Co., 173 Mo. 511, 73 SW 505; Noel v. Hill, 158 Mo. A. 426, 138 SW 364 (both applying the rule). Compare Ward v. McMath, 153 Ark. 506, 513, 241 SW 3 (holding that a deed to designated individuals, their successors and assigns, for the use and benefit of an unincorporated association, vests the legal title in the trustees and the equitable title in those who then constituted the membership of the association, who could be readily ascertained, and the conveyance "was thus not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities which prevents alienation").

41. Gray Perp. § 278; Perry Trusts (6th ed) § 377 note. Compare Libby v. Winston, 207 Ala. 681, 684, 93 S 631 ("The rule against perpetuities and the rule against the suspension of the power of alienation are the expressions of distinct conceptions that should not be confused").

"To suppose that the Rule against Perpetuities is needed to restrain a suspension of alienation, or that present interests in property might be made inalienable were it not for the Rule, is to throw the fundamentals of the law into confusion." Gray Perp. § 278.

"The chief reason why the rule against perpetuities has been so often regarded as aimed against restraints upon alienation seems to be that with few exceptions restraints upon the power to alienate an interest in property can be imposed only by making the interest conditional upon some future contingency. But attempted restraints upon power to alienate vested interests come under an entirely different rule." Perry Trusts (6th ed) § 377 note.

Cas. 213, 22 Reprint 767 that so long as there are persons in being, no matter how numerous they may be, who by joining can convey a full title in possession to the realty, there is no offense against the doctrine of perpetuities—was supposed to be the law of England, the statutes of New York were framed; and that idea was made a part thereof so plainly that there is no good reason for going astray in respect thereto." "In my opinion a present right to an interest in property which may arise at a period beyond the legal limit is void notwithstanding that the person entitled to it may release it. . . . It is impossible to assert as a general proposition that where the owner of an estate and the owner of such a contingent interest can together make a good title, or one can release to the other, the rule of perpetuities does not apply." London, etc., R. Co. v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. 562, 573 (per Kay, J.).

"The true doctrine [has been] clearly stated by the Court of Appeal in London, etc., R. Co. v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. 562." Gray Perp. § 275.

"It is frequently said that the purpose of the rule is to prevent restraints upon alienation of property by the creation of remote interests in it which are inalienable by nature; but, although this is undoubtedly a usual result of its operation, it seems better to regard the rule as aiming to prevent the creation of remote unvested interests rather than to prevent restraints upon alienation of the property itself or of vested interests in it." Public policy was the reason for the rule. . . . Has it any relation to contracts as to shares of stock of a private business corporation? There is no principle of public policy involved. It can make no difference to the general public, or to any other than stockholders of that particular company. To tie up land, which is the source of all wealth, is quite a different thing from giving an unlimited option to buy all unissued shares of a corporation doing a private business").

D. 211 (supporting the principle stated in the text, but pointing out that a different result may be obtained from the application of the rule to corresponding legal and equitable interests. Where property was conveyed in trust for one for life and then for such of his children as should reach the age of twenty-five, the equitable executory interest or contingent remainder was held void, inasmuch as it might not become vested within twenty-one years after the death of the life tenant; but the court recognized that if a legal life estate had been created, with remainder to such of the life tenant's children as reached twenty-five, such remainder would have been good, for it would have vested upon the death of the life tenant in those of his children, if any, who had then reached twenty-five, and as to any other children would have been destroyed for want of a preceding estate).

Contractual rights. The rule against perpetuities is one of property only, and has no application to mere personal contracts which do not create or transfer any right of property.[61] Where, however, a contract creates an interest in property which could, except for the rule, be enforced by a decree for specific performance, such interest is subject to the rule.[62]

A rent charge,[63] to commence in the future at a time beyond that specified by the rule against perpetuities,[64] considered either as a contract obligation[65] or as a restriction on the amount of the estate of the debtor,[66] is not within the rule.[67]

[d] Transfer of contract; principle distinguished.—"Although the Rule does not affect the creation of such a [personal] contract, it does apply to a transfer of the contract when created. Thus if the promisee in such a contract should bequeath it to A. on a remote contingency, the bequest would be void. Gifts of freedom to slaves[68] appear to be within the rule against perpetuities,[69] although there is authority to the contrary.[70]

[§ 20] 2. Present Interests—a. In General. The rule against perpetuities, which by its express terms[71] relates to interests and estates that may not vest within the period therein specified,[72] has no application to present interests, legal or equitable, in realty or personalty,[73] whether alienable or not.[74]

[§ 21] b. Charitable Gifts.[75] Present gifts of real or personal estates to be devoted to charitable uses[76] commencing in præsenti are often supported as a supposed exception to the rule against perpetuities.[77] It would seem, however, that they are properly regarded as present interests, vested in the charitable institution, and consequently not within the scope of the rule.[78]

[§ 22] c. Leases and Convenants for Renewal. A lease for any term, taking effect in præsenti, does not violate the rule against perpetuities,[79] although it may be in violation of a statute designed to prevent perpetual or extended leases.[80]

A covenant for renewal of a lease perpetually[81] or at the end of a term in excess of the period specified by the rule against perpetuities[82] is not subject to the rule; although there is language in some cases[83] indicating that such agreements create "perpetuities," the matter there under discussion is the undesirability[84] of permitting interests to continue perpetually,[85] rather than any suspension of the power of alienation or postponement of the vesting of an interest. However, if the right represented by a covenant for renewal, or the right to call for a lease, is to arise or vest at a time beyond the period permitted by the rule, it, like other chattel interests,[86] is obnoxious to the rule.[87]

[§ 23] d. Easements—(1) In General. Easements,[88] whether being in gross[89] or appurtenant to land,[90] including so-called equitable ease-

sidered as a limitation of the estate and not as creating remainders in them; the ground of the decision, however, being stated to be that "it is only an undue restraint on alienation which creates a forbidden perpetuity," and here "there is an express grant of the power of alienation"). "The statement is often found in the books that the law against perpetuities does not apply to public charities. But the statement is misleading. . . . It must be remembered that the rule against perpetuities, in its proper legal sense, has relation only to the time of the vesting of an estate, and in no way affects its continuance after it is once vested. . . . It is the possibility that the estate left in trust for a charitable purpose, may not vest or begin within the limits of a life or lives in being and twenty-one years, that offends against the rule of 'perpetuity' or 'remoteness.'" Brooks v. Belfast, 90 Me. 318, 324, 38 A 222.

Boardman, 28 Mo. 420 (where such a covenant was held valid, but it does not appear that the court was speaking with specific reference to the rule against perpetuities).

"An estate for years . . . with a perpetual covenant for renewal is, so far as questions of remoteness are concerned, substantially a fee, and as such it is regarded." Nichols v. Day, 128 Misc. 756, 765, 91 S 451 [quot Gray Perp. § 230].

[a] Reasons for rule.—(1) It has been said that covenants to renew leases are to be treated as exceptions to the general rule against perpetuities, "exceptions for which it is very difficult to find a logical justification, but exceptions which have been probably recognized because they were in existence long before the rule had been developed." Woodall v. Clifton, [1905] 2 Ch. 257, 265. (2) On the other hand it has been held that "the covenant for renewal is only an incident to the lease," and, in effect, is a part of the possessory right acquired by the lessee. Blackmore v. Boardman, 28 Mo. 420, 426. Compare Gray Perp. § 230 ("It seems hardly necessary to create any exception to meet the case,—the covenant to renew is part of the lessee's present interest").

[§ 25] e. Curtesy[96] and Dower.[97] Without regard to whether estates by the curtesy and dower are, strictly speaking, present estates or not, it would seem that they are not subject to the rule against perpetuities.[98]

[§ 26] 3. Future Interests—a. Vested Interests—(1) In General. A vested future interest or estate[99] is not within the rule against perpetuities,[1] which by its terms[2] applies only to interests and estates which will vest, if at all, in the future,[3] except when such interest or estate is expectant upon an estate which is void for remoteness,[4] and except when it is vested in a class which may increase or diminish in membership at a remote time.[5]

[§ 27] (2) Vested Remainders.[6] The rule against perpetuities does not apply to vested remainders,[7] nor to the corresponding equitable interests commonly referred to as vested equitable remainders,[8] even though defeasible,[9] and although the preceding estate may not come to an end within the period specified by the rule,[10] except in the case of remainders vested in a class which may increase or diminish in membership at a time too remote,[11] and except in the case of those which follow upon estates void for remoteness.[12]

the cases hereinabove mentioned.[15]

[§ 28] (3) Reversions.[16] Reversions, being vested estates,[17] are not subject to the rule against perpetuities.[18]

Interests in personal property analogous to reversions[19] are likewise outside the scope of the rule.[20]

Resulting trusts[21] upon express trusts which do not exhaust the equitable fee, as when only equitable life estates are created, have been said by a learned writer to be vested reversionary interests and therefore not within the rule.[22]

[§ 29] (4) Possibilities of Reverter.[23] Possibilities of reverter, upon determinable or qualified fees[24] or fees conditional at the common law,[25] are not within the rule against perpetuities.[26]

Resulting trusts[27] upon determinable equitable fees are, by analogy to possibilities of reverter, not subject to the rule.[28]

[§ 30] (5) Rights of Entry for Condition Broken.[29] In the United States, rights of entry for condition broken are regarded as of the nature of reversions,[30] and therefore are not within the scope of the rule against perpetuities;[31] but by the English law they are construed to be executory interests, and so void,[32] unless the condition must happen, if at all, within the period specified by the rule.[33]

Interests in personalty in the nature of rights of entry for condition broken are, in this country, it would seem, not within the rule.[34]

[§ 31] (6) Escheat.[35] It has been said by eminent authority, although without citation of judicial precedent, that rights of escheat in real property and rights in personalty analogous thereto are not within the rule against perpetuities.[36]

[§ 32] (7) Equitable Interests.[37] Equitable future interests in property are not subject to the rule against perpetuities when the legal interests to which they are analogous are not within its scope.[38]

"It has been expressly held by this court that . . . possibility of reverter upon breach of a condition subsequent is not within the rule against perpetuities. . . . If there is any distinction in this respect between such possibility of reverter and that which arises upon the determination of a qualified fee, it would seem to be in favor of the latter. But they should be governed by the same rule. If one is not held void for remoteness, the other should not be." North Adams First Universalist Soc. v. Compare In re Randell, 38 Ch. D. 213, 218 (where by will a trust for a definite purpose was created, and it was held that a provision in the will that upon the ending of the purpose the money and income should fall into and be dealt with as part of the residuary estate was not void as a perpetuity, for "it would do so just as much if there was no such limitation as this in the will, as it does when the limitation exists. . . . In my opinion a direction that in a particular event a fund shall go in the way in which the law would make it go in the absence of such a direction, cannot be said to be an invalid gift, or contrary to the policy of the law"); In re Blunt, [1904] 2 Ch. 767 (to same effect).

Contingent remainders.[44] By a somewhat similar, but distinct, principle, contingent remainders which may not vest within the limits of the rule against perpetuities, but which, by the terms of their creation, must follow directly upon estates which will necessarily end within the period specified by the rule, being destroyed by operation of law unless they do vest upon the determination of such preceding estates,[45] are therefore not obnoxious to the rule.[46]

[a] Reasons assigned.—(1) "A future estate which at all times until it vests is in the control of the owner of the preceding estate, is, for every purpose of conveyancing, a present estate, and is therefore not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities." Pulitzer v. Livingston, 89 Me. 359, 366, 36 A 635 [quot Gray Perp. § 443]. To same effect H. J. Lewis Oyster Co. v. West, 93 Conn. 518, 532, 107 A 138. (2) "If a man has the present unconditioned right to acquire the present absolute interest, he is regarded by the rule against perpetuities as already having such interest. . . . A tenant in tail is such a person because he can destroy the future limitation by barring the entail. . . . A donee of a general power to be exercised by deed (not by will) is such a person because he can appoint to himself and therefore is practically the owner." H. J. Lewis Oyster Co. v. West, supra. See to same effect Mifflin's App., 121 Pa. 205, 222, 15 A 525, 1 LRA 453, 6 AmR 781.

[b] Power of cestuis to revoke trust.—A power given to the equitable owners of a trust estate to revoke and destroy the trusts at any time removes the case from the rule against perpetuities. Pulitzer v. Livingston, 89 Me. 359, 36 A 635.

[c] Agreement not to partition.—An agreement among the members of a society to hold all property in common does not constitute a perpetuity, when the majority of the members, under the general rule that the majority governs the conduct of the society, may break up the association and require a partition or sale of the property. Goesele v. Bimeler, 14 How. (U. S.) 589, 14 L. ed. 554.

42. Mifflin's App., 121 Pa. 205, 224, 15 A 525, 1 LRA 453, 6 AmR 781.
"The estate of M . . . was destructible by her own act. It was entirely within her power to become the owner in fee simple of the estates granted and to totally defeat any ulterior limitations. It proves nothing to say she did not exercise her power and that therefore the situation is the same as though she never had the power. For certain purposes and in certain cases that, of course, is true. But in considering merely the application of the rule against perpetuities, it is not true, because that rule requires that the estates in question should be indestructible, and an estate which can be destroyed by the person who holds it for the time being is not indestructible." Mifflin's App., supra.

43. Gray Perp. § 568 note. But see Segall v. Soifer, 29 Pa. Dist. 729 (where the court said, obiter, that, under a conveyance, subject to mortgage, providing that in the event of a foreclosure of such mortgage and sale of the property the proceeds, over and above the amount of the mortgage debt, should be paid to the grantor, the right of the grantor to receive such proceeds did not create a perpetuity, because the grantee would have the power to pay off the mortgage, at least upon its maturity, which in the instant case would occur within the period of the rule, and so the grantor's right was a contingent one which was destructible and was not subject to the rule against perpetuities).

[a] Illustration.—Where property was conveyed in trust for one for life and then for such of his children as should reach the age of twenty-five, the equitable executory interest or contingent remainder was held void, inasmuch as it might not become vested within twenty-one years after the death of the life tenant; but the court recognized that if a legal life estate had been created, with remainder to such of the life tenant's children as reached twenty-five, such remainder would have been good, for it would have vested upon the death of the life tenant in those of his children, if any, who had then reached twenty-five, and as to any other children would have been destroyed for want of a preceding estate. I. 188 (apparently conceding the validity of the ultimate limitation over); Doe v. Ewart, 7 A. & E. 636, 34 ECL 337, 112 Reprint 609 (apparently assuming the validity of such limitation over as a remainder if it had not been destroyed by barring the entail). Compare Hawley v. Northampton, 8 Mass. 3, 5 AmD 66 (where limitations creating remainders after an estate tail were treated as valid, but the rule against perpetuities was not considered, the entailment having been barred by the tenant in tail). But see Morris v. Fisher, 8 Pa. Dist. 161 [rev 46 A 1102 mem by agreement of parties, the grounds not appearing] (holding that a remainder after a term of years which would otherwise be void for remoteness is not exempted from the operation of the rule against perpetuities by the fact that estates tail are carved out of the term of years and will exhaust the whole of such term).

[a] All remainders (1) whether vested or contingent, following an estate tail are good, for they must take effect, if at all, at the expiration of such estate. Barber v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 166 U. S. 83, 17 SCt 488, 41 L. ed. 925; Cole v. Sewell, 2 H. L. Cas. 186, 9 Reprint 1062; Jack v. Fetherstone, 2 Hud. & B. 320; Goodwin v. Clark, 1 Lev. 35, 83 Reprint 284; Morse v. Ormonde, 5 Madd. 99, 56 Reprint 833. (2) "The remainder expectant upon an estate tail was not affected at common law by the rule against perpetuities, because there was always someone who could cut off the entail and convert the estate into a fee, and when the tenant in tail destroyed the entail the remainder fell with it." Hickox v. Klaholt, 291 Ill. 544, 549, 126 NE 166.

[b] In Pennsylvania (1) the principle stated in the text was formerly applied. Stone v. McMullen, 1 Penny. 108, 10 WklyNC 541. See Taylor v. Taylor, 63 Pa. 481, 3 AmR 565 (dictum). But see Vaughan v. Dickes, 20 Pa. 509; Eichelberger v. Barnitz, 9 Watts 447 (in both of which limitations after estates tail were considered to be executory devises and therefore void for remoteness). (2) But after the Act of April 27, 1855, converting estates tail into fees simple, it was held that an attempted limitation over after the termination of such an estate by failure of issue could take effect only as an executory devise, and, not being necessarily to happen within the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities, was void for before[50] the expiration of the estate tail is good, for throughout the time it can remain contingent it is destructible.[51] If, however, an estate so limited may not vest until after the expiration of the preceding estate tail, it may become indestructible by failure of the tenant in tail to destroy it by barring or docking the entail, and therefore is void for remoteness,[52] unless by the terms of the limitation it will nevertheless necessarily vest, if at all, within the period after its creation prescribed by the rule against perpetuities.[53]

Executory interests.[54] An executory interest limited after an estate tail, not being destructible by the tenant in tail,[55] is not within the reason of the principle hereinbefore stated allowing remainders so limited to be good,[56] and is void because it will not necessarily vest within the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities.[57]

[§ 36] (2) Indestructible Interests[58]—(a) In General. Broadly speaking, all indestructible[59] nonvested or contingent[60] future[61] interests and estates,[62] except interests and estates limited over from one charity to another,[63] are obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, unless they must necessarily vest, if at all, within the period by it specified.[64]

Future interests in estates for life or term of years not exceeding twenty-one. It would seem that no future interests created in an existing estate for life or lives,[65] or, on the same principle, in a term of years which will necessarily terminate within twenty-one years from the creation of such future estates,[66] are obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, for, as the res in which such interests are created must itself determine within the limits of the rule,[67] the future interests therein must necessarily vest, if at all, within such limits.

[§ 37] (b) Nonvested or Contingent Remainders.[68] Nonvested or contingent remainders[69] and remoteness. Robinson's Est., 149 Pa. 418, 24 A 297; Reinoehl v. Shirk, 119 Pa. 108, 12 A 806.

[c] Limitations prior to estates tail distinguished.—(1) A limitation prior to an estate tail is not good unless it complies with the requirements of the rule against perpetuities, for barring the entail cannot destroy the preceding limitations. Case v. Drosier, 2 Keen 764, 15 EngCh 764, 48 Reprint 824 [aff 5 Myl. & C. 246, 46 EngCh 224, 41 Reprint 364]; Mainwaring v. Baxter, 5 Ves. Jr. 458, 31 Reprint 681. (2) And when a term in trust is prior to an estate tail, but the trusts of the term can operate only during the continuance of the estate tail, although the tenant in tail by barring the estate, while not thereby destroying the term, will make it impossible for any of the trusts of the term to take effect, yet such trusts have been held to be subject to the rule. "In considering limitations after an estate tail an important point is to observe whether they can possibly vest at a time subsequent to the termination of the estate tail. If they can, they are bad. It is true that if the tenant in tail should bar the entail, such limitations would be destroyed; but if the estate tail should come to an end without being barred, and the remainder-man in fee come into possession, the limitations would be indestructible, and so obnoxious to the Rule against Perpetuities. As therefore the limitations might vest at a remote time, and might be incapable of destruction by the owner of the estate in possession, they are void altogether." Gray Perp. § 446.

[a] Thus, where land is given to A in tail, remainder to B in fee, but, if any holder of the property ceases to bear a certain name, then to C, the conditional limitation may take effect after the tenant in tail has died without issue, and when the remainderman or his grantee is in possession, and is therefore too remote. 535; In re Frost, 43 Ch. D. 246. See London, etc., R. Co. v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. 562 (dictum). Compare Cattlin v. Brown, 11 Hare 372, 374, 45 EngCh 367, 68 Reprint 1319 ("A contingent remainder cannot be limited as depending on the termination of a particular estate, whose determination will not necessarily take place within the period allowed by law"). But see Cole v. Sewell, 4 Dr. & War. 1, 28 [aff 2 H. L. Cas. 186, 9 Reprint 1062] ("If . . . it [a limitation] is a remainder, it must take effect, if at all, upon the determination of the preceding estate. In the latter case, the event may or may not happen, before, or at, the instant the preceding estate is determined, and the limitation will fail, or not, according to that event. It may thus be prevented from taking effect, but it can never lead to remoteness. That objection, therefore, cannot be sustained against the validity of a contingent remainder"). To same effect Abbiss v. Burney, 17 Ch. D. 211, 217 (the vice chancellor adding: "Now why is this? If the particular estate be an estate for life, the remainder must vest during the continuance of that estate, and there never can be any danger of remoteness or tying-up of property, because the very instant when the estate comes into existence the tenant for life and the remainderman can bar the entail and bar the limitations depending on the estate tail. For that reason, therefore, a remainder never can be void for remoteness").

[a] So long as contingent remainders were destructible by the tenant of the preceding estate, it would seem that they were not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities. See Caldwell v. Willis, 57 Miss. 555, 573 (where it was said that a limitation is void if it may not vest within the period of the rule, "except when the limitation is by way of contingent remainder, which may be cut off by the alienation of the particular tenant [which liability to be defeated in this way is the reason for the exception]"). Hurst, 284 Pa. 94, 98, 130 A 315 (where a testator bequeathed the income from certain property to his widow and daughter M for their lives, remainder to the "issue and descendants" of M during the term of their natural lives, with remainder over upon the death of the last of such issue and descendants or in the event of the death of M without leaving issue or descendants, and the court said: "As M's children were not born at the testator's death, the title could not be held in abeyance longer than twenty-one years after her death and that of the widow; while the will attempts not only to continue the income to M's children for life, but also to her descendants without limit. . . . The life gift to M's children (none of whom was born prior to testator's death) is plainly violative of the rule, so the only life estates which apparently are not, are those to the widow and daughter").

[b] Gift of freedom to slave analogous to executory limitation.—(1) When a slave is bequeathed to a legatee, with a provision that, if the latter sells him or takes him out of the state, the slave shall be free, the bequest of freedom is a specific legacy, analogous to a remainder over to another person upon the happening of the contingency, and it must take effect, if at all, within the life of the legatee, and so is not too remote. Williams v. Ash, 1 How. (U. S.) 1, 11 L. ed. 25. (2) But when a deed emancipates a female slave when she shall attain the age of twenty-five, and provides further that any children she may have shall be slaves until they respectively reach twenty-five, when they and their increase shall be emancipated, the grant of freedom to the children of the female is too remote, since they may not attain the age specified within twenty-one years after the death of their mother. Ludwig v. Combs, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 128. But see Wood v. Humphreys, 12 Gratt. (53 Va.) 333; Pleasants v. But see Kingston v. Home L. Ins. Co., 11 Del. Ch. 258, 101 A 898 (refusing to apply the rule against perpetuities to an option for the purchase of corporate stock, on the ground that it is based upon the public policy disapproving of keeping real estate out of commerce for an unreasonably long period, and that there is no principle of public policy involved in a contract giving an option to buy shares of a corporation doing a private business); Keogh v. Peck, 316 Ill. 318, 332, 147 NE 266, 38 ALR 1151 (holding that an option in a lease for ninety-nine years giving the lessee the right to purchase the demised premises at any time during the term of the lease is not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, because "in this State no title, legal or equitable, is granted, and no interest in land is created in the holder of the option by an option agreement"); Hollander v. Central Metal, etc., Co., 109 Md. 131, 159, 161, 71 A 442, 23 LRANS 1135 (holding that, in a lease for ninety-nine years, perpetually renewable, a convenant to convey to the lessee upon the payment of certain sums is not within the rule against perpetuities, and the court said: "Our predecessors, in view of the fact that titles to property of great value in Baltimore City, and elsewhere in the State, are held under [such] leases, . . . have somewhat relaxed the technical rules applicable to such essell[91] property, or a contract for a right of preëmption,[92] which is not limited to the period specified by the rule against perpetuities, or which provides for renewal indefinitely or beyond such period,[93] is obnoxious to the rule, and is not enforceable by decree for specific performance, although damages may be recoverable at law for its breach.[94] But where the option is personal to the holder, and terminates at his death, it does not violate the rule.[95]

[§ 41] (f) Equitable Interests. Indestructible nonvested or contingent equitable future interests in property are void under the rule against perpetuities when the legal interests to which they are analogous are obnoxious thereto.[96]

[§ 42] (g) Interests in Personalty. Indestructible nonvested contingent future interests in personal property are obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities when such interests, if in real property, would be bad thereunder.[97]

V. PARTICULAR LIMITATIONS

[§ 43] A. Limitations Over on Failure of Issue.[98] A limitation or gift over of real or personal property which is to take effect upon a failure of issue[99] of the preceding taker or another, occurring within the period specified by the rule against perpetuities after the creation of the estate or interest,[1] as upon a failure of issue at the death of a person or persons by whose lives the period is measured,[2] or with-tates, for the purpose of enforcing the contracts of the parties thereto. . . . We must adhere to the previous decisions of this Court, and hold that the lease in question did not place the property extra commercium, and that the rights of the parties under the covenants therein are 'not open to any of the objections against perpetuities' ").

"The right to call for a conveyance of the land is an equitable interest or equitable estate." London, etc., R. Co. v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. 562, 581. See to same effect Redington v. Browne, L. R. 32 Ir. 347.

"A contract which attempts to grant a continuing option of purchase unlimited in point of time is void ab initio, because it attempts to create a contingent future interest which may not vest within the period limited by the rule against perpetuities." H. J. Lewis Oyster Co. v. West, 93 Conn. 518, 530, 107 A 138.

[a] A covenant to reconvey (1) upon demand and the payment of a specified sum is to be treated as an option to purchase so far as concerns the application of the rule against perpetuities. London, etc., R. Co. v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. 562. (2) Thus a covenant to reconvey land upon demand in ninety-nine years is void within the rule against perpetuities. Kauri Timber Co. v. District Land Registrar, 21 New Zeal. L. 84.

[b] An option to redeem from a rent charge, exercisable after the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities, is void as a violation of that rule. In re Donoughmore, [1911] 1 Ir. 211; In re Tyrrell, [1907] 1 Ir. 292 [overr Switzer & Co., Ltd. v. Rochford, [1906] 1 Ir. 339].

[c] Reason for rule.—"Now is there any substantial distinction between a contract for purchase, or an option for purchase, and a limitation, or a conditional limitation? Can it make any difference in substance whether it is this case, a limitation to A. in fee, with a provision that, whenever B., or his heirs, sends A., or his heirs, a notice in writing and pays £100., the estate shall vest in B. and his heirs, or a contract that if B. does give a notice and pays £100., then A. shall convey to B. and his heirs? It seems to me that in a court of equity it is impossible to suggest that there is any real distinction. If there is no distinction between those two cases, can there be any distinction when the option is put, not that B. shall buy, but that he shall be entitled to buy? There is the same fetter on the estate, and on the owners of the estate, for all time, and it seems to me to be plain that that ought to fall within the rule as to remoteness, which prohibits that kind of fetter for an indefinite period of time hanging over the estate." London, etc., R. Co. v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. 562, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 449, 452 (per Jessel, M. R.).

[d] The leading case, reviewing the law of perpetuities in general and the prior decisions regarding options and covenants to reconvey, and establishing the present law on the subject, is London, etc., R. Co v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. 562 [overr Birmingham Canal Co. v. Cartwright, 11 Ch. D. 421].

[a] Principle distinguished.—"It is not in my opinion the contract which is void because it infringes the rule against perpetuities, but it is the limitation which, by the operation of the doctrines of the Court of Equity, it is the effect of the contract to create, that is void. The contract remains a valid contract in every respect, but it is the limitation it creates in the contemplation of the Court of Equity, and it is that alone, which is void." Worthing Corp. v. Heather, [1906] 2 Ch. 532, 540, 4 BRC 280.

Rotterman, 330 Ill. 362, 161 NE 756 (where a mother conveyed property to her daughter, who acted as manager of her mother's affairs, and who agreed in writing to reconvey upon the mother's demand, the privilege of demanding a reconveyance was personal to the mother, and did not purport to extend to her heirs or assigns, and consequently terminated with her death, and therefore was not within the rule against perpetuities); Weitzmann v. Weitzmann, (Ind. A.) 161 NE 385 (an option given by will to testator's son, to whom testator had also given his business and the furnishings of his store, to buy the store building for business purposes, was personal to the son and did not violate any rule against perpetuities).

Compare In re Rousseau, 48 S. D. 501, 205 NW 222 (treating a limitation over upon death without issue as good, apparently construing it as meaning failure of issue upon the death of the first taker).

"If the devise over is upon a failure of issue at a particular time fixed, as at the time of the death of the first taker, the gift over is good by way of executory devise; for it is not liable to the objection of remoteness, and does not tend to a perpetuity." Burrough v. Foster, 6 R. I. 534, 539.

[a] Principle applied.—A trust deed conveying property to trustees for the use of the grantor's children, with a limitation over in case all the children died leaving no issue then surviving, is not void for remoteness, since the word "children," in the absence of anything in the instrument indicating that the word was used with a different meaning, refers only to such persons as are in life when the deed is executed and delivered, and therefore did not include after-born children. True Real Est. Co. v. True, 115 Me. 533, 99 A 627.

"Definite failure of issue" defined see Definite 18 C. J. p 466 text and note 69.

3. Forman v. Troup, 30 Ga. 496, 498; Winebrener's Est., 15 Pa. Co. 289; Trickey v. Trickey, 3 Myl. & K. 560, 10 EngCh 560, 40 Reprint 213. Compare Egbert v. Schultz, 29 Ind. 242 (holding that a limitation over of real estate in case the heirs of A's body living at her death shall die before reaching the age of twenty-one is not void if A leaves no heirs of her body, but takes effect at her death).

"A devise on failure of issue within a life in being, and 21 years is good. . . . It need not be at the death of the first taker." Forman v. Troup, supra.

[a] Principle applied.—A limitation over of property given by will in case the first takers, grandchildren of the testator, should die "without leaving any children or the issue of any deceased child living at their death," or "if leaving such child or issue, all of them shall die under the age of twenty-one years, without issue," is not void for remoteness; the court, pointing out that in the first contingency the failure of issue of the grandchildren must certainly be determined at their death, said: "The alternative contingency . . . must as certainly happen within the period of twenty-one years after the death of the grandchild. The case is, perhaps, anomalous, because it is entirely possible that the daughter of the deceased grandchild (whose share is now in dispute) may marry and have a child and die in her minority, and that the child shall also die within twenty-one years after the death of its grandparent. We shall then have representatives of two generations, both of them born after the death of the testator, and both of them dying within the time prescribed by the rule. This possibility was noted in the adjudication, but inasmuch as it must happen, if at all, within twenty-one years after the end of a life which was in being at the death of the testator, it cannot impair the validity of the limitation." Winebrener's Est., 15 Pa. Co. 289.

4. See cases infra this note. But see Tator v. Tator, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 431 (refusing to apply the principle stated in the text, except where the devise over to a person in being is of a life estate only). And see cases infra notes 7, 8, failing to admit the exception stated in the text.

[a] "A limitation over for life to one in esse, after a dying without issue, may be good. . . . Because the future limitation being only for life, of one in esse, it must take effect during that life or not at all, and therefore the failure of issue in that case, is confined to the compass of a life in being." Biscoe v. Biscoe, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 232, 238. See to same effect Trafford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. 440, 26 Reprint 1054; Roe v. Jeffery, 7 T. R. 589, 101 Reprint 1147; Doe v. Lyde, 1 T. R. 593, 99 Reprint 1269. See also Ide v. Ide, 6 Mass. 500; Tator v. Tator, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 431 (dicta).

[b] A limitation over in fee to persons in being at the creation of the estate, upon the failure of issue of the preceding taker, has been held not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, where "it is evident the testatrix contemplated the remainder to vest in them during their lives." Woodley v. Findlay, 9 Ala. 716, 720.

5. In re Lowman, [1895] 2 Ch. 348.

beyond lives in being,[6] is not obnoxious to that rule. However, a limitation or gift over which is to take effect upon a failure of issue that may occur at a period beyond that specified by the rule,[7] as upon an indefinite failure of issue, that is, a failure whenever it occurs at any time in the future,[8] may not vest within the period of the rule and consequently is void for remoteness,[9] except, in the case of real property, where the preceding estate is construed as an estate tail, upon the expiration of which the limitation over is to take effect as a remainder;[10] but in those jurisdictions in which estates tail are

6. See cases infra this note.

[a] Executory bequest of slave.—(1) An executory bequest of a male slave upon condition that the first taker should die without heirs of his body has been held not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, the court saying that, although, in general, a limitation over upon failure of issue is too remote, "in this case, the subject of the bequest, the thing given, is a negro man, a life in being, and the limitation over could never by possibility take effect, but in his life-time. May it not therefore be a reasonable construction to confine it to a failure of issue during a life in being, the life-time of the negro man himself, the subject of the bequest?" Biscoe v. Biscoe, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 232, 239. See Royall v. Eppes, 2 Munf. (61 Va.) 479 (applying the principle to an executory bequest of slaves, both males and females, so far as appears from the opinion, where the increase of the slaves was not included in the bequest). (2) On the other hand, it has been said of a similar bequest that "this is in substance a limitation over after a dying without issue. The limitation is too remote." Matthews v. Daniel, 5 N. C. 42. (3) And when the legacy is a female slave and her increase, the reason given for exempting the executory limitation from the operation of the rule has no application, and the limitation is void. [a] Definite failure of issue which may occur beyond period of rule.—A limitation over to take effect on the death without issue then living of the children of the first taker of property is void for remoteness, since it is made to depend upon a contingency which might occur after the expiration of the period within which the rule against perpetuities requires an estate to become absolutely vested. enlarged into fees by statute,[11] the limitation over could take effect only as an executory devise or shifting use and is therefore void for remoteness.[12]

[§ 44] B. Limitations to Classes[13]—1. In General—a. Rule Stated. A gift or limitation of an interest or estate in property to a class whose members will necessarily be ascertained and take vested interests, if at all, within, or at the end of, the period specified by the rule against perpetuities is not obnoxious to that rule;[14] but, except in the case of independent limitations to the members of a class,[15] a possibility that any one or more members may come within the description of the class and take a share or interest, or, having been within its description, cease to be so and thus fail to take a share or interest, at a time beyond that prescribed by the rule, will render the entire gift void,[16] inasmuch as the number of persons who will take and, consequently, the size of their respective shares may not be determined within the permitted period and the vesting of the estate may accordingly be unlawfully postponed.[17] In other words, if a gift or limitation is void as to any of the class to which it is given it is void as to all;[18] and, similarly, it seems that if a gift to a class and a designated individual in common is void as to any of the class it is void also as to such individual.[19]

[a] In Pennsylvania (1) it was formerly held that a gift to one with a limitation over in the event of the indefinite failure of his issue created an estate tail in the first taker, and the limitation over took effect as a remainder and consequently was not void for remoteness. Stone v. McMullen, 10 WklyNC 541. See Taylor v. Taylor, 63 Pa. 481, 3 AmR 565 (dictum). But see Vaughan v. Dickes, 20 Pa. 509; Eichelberger v. Barnitz, 9 Watts 447 (in both of which such limitations over are treated as executory devises, and indestructible by the tenant in tail, and therefore void for remoteness). (2) Since the Act of April 27, 1855, repealing the statute de donis conditionalibus and converting estates tail into fees simple, however, it was said that the estate given to the first taker is converted into a fee simple, and that such a gift over on failure of issue, which could then take effect only as an executory limitation, is void for remoteness. [a] "The reason (1) why a gift to a class, as children or the like, is void when it may embrace some object too remote, is this:—there is no intention to give to any number short of the whole class; and, therefore, if the prescribed limit may be transgressed before the class is filled up, the whole gift fails, because it does not necessarily take effect within the prescribed period." Dungannon v. Smith, 12 Cl. & F. 546, 575, 8 Reprint 1523. Compare Leake v. Robinson, 2 Meriv. 363, 35 Reprint 979 (where the Master of the Rolls said: "I must make a new will for the testator, if I split into portions his general bequest to the class, and say, that because the rule of law forbids his intention from operating in favour of the whole class, I will make his bequests, what he never intended them to be, viz. a series of particular legacies to particular individuals"). (2) The reason for the principle is the difficulty of determining what would have been the intention of the donor if he had been advised of the existence of the rule against perpetuities, and what different disposition of his property he would have made in such case. [a] Thus (1) it has been held that, where a gift is limited to a class of persons by descriptive terms and to an individual by name, as tenants in common, the gifts to all are interdependent and all the beneficiaries together form a class, so that the gift to the individual, as well as to the described class, is void for remoteness if any member of the class may come within its description and take a share at a time beyond that specified by the rule against perpetuities. Porter v. Fox, 6 Sim. 485, 9 EngCh 485, 58 Reprint 676. (2) In a later case involving a similar limitation, but which was decided on other grounds, the court said, as to the validity of the gift to the designated individual: "If it had been necessary to deal with that argument, I confess that I should have some difficulty in following the decision in Porter v. Fox, supra, which seems to me not sustainable on an accurate view of what was said by Sir William Grant in Leake v. Robinson, 2 Meriv. 363, 35 Reprint 979. That great Judge carefully draws the distinction between a gift to an individual and a gift to a class. . . . I only wish to be understood as suggesting that, if the question should occur for decision, it should not be considered as concluded by authority. . . . Where there is a clear gift to an individual, and a gift to a class of persons who are to take along with him, the individual and each member of the class to take as tenants in common, what remains to be shewn is how, if the class be so described as that the gift to them cannot take effect, the gift to the individual should therefore also fail, any more than if, instead of the gift being to an individual and to a class of persons to take along with him, the gifts were to the individual and any other number of individuals to take with him as tenants in common, as to which other individuals the gift might happen to fail or be given in an ineffectual manner." James v. Wynford, 1 Smale & G. 39, 58, 65 Reprint 18. But see Gray Perp. § 380 (where this criticism is said to be "without just reason"). (3) Thereafter, however, a devise to designated grandsons by name and to any others thereafter born was held void for remoteness as to all, the Master of the Rolls (Sir John Romilly) saying: "I am . . . of opinion, upon the best consideration that I can give to this will, that the existing grandsons formed only a portion of a class," and inasmuch as the class might not be ascertained until a time too remote, the gift to them was void. Webster v. Bodding-

of Membership. In accordance with the principles governing the validity of limitations to classes,[20] where an interest or estate limited to a class is not to vest until the ascertainment of the individuals who will comprise the class, it is not too remote if the membership of the class will necessarily be ascertained within the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities,[21] but if the membership of such class may possibly remain uncertain for a time beyond that specified by the rule the gift or limitation as a whole is void for remoteness.[22]

[§ 46] c. Interest Vested in Membership Liable To Increase or Diminish. In accordance with the principles governing the validity of limitations to classes,[23] where an interest or estate is or becomes vested[24] in the then existing members of a class to which it is limited, but the class is open to allow any persons afterward coming within its description to be included and take interests, thereby diminishing or in part divesting the shares of the original members, the gift or limitation is not too remote if the persons to take and, therefore, the number and size of the respective shares will necessarily be ascertained within the period prescribed by the rule,[25] but if the number of shares may possibly not be ascertained within such period the limitation is obnoxious to the rule.[26] On the other hand, although the extreme limits of a class are necessarily ascertainable within the period of the rule, if the individual members of it who will be within its description at the time of vesting or distribution and be entitled to take shares or interests may possibly not be ascertained within such period, the whole limitation is void for remoteness, inasmuch as the number of members may be diminished and the size of the respective shares be increased at a time beyond the

It vested in the children who were then living as members of a class, which would open to admit other members, as persons answering the class description should thereafter, and until the termination of the twenty-five year period, be born," and the gift was held valid; but since all of such children would necessarily be born within lives in being at the testatrix's death, it would seem that the class could not remain open a longer period than that prescribed by the rule against perpetuities).

[a] Thus a devise of property to the testator's nephews and nieces, children of his brothers and sisters, for their lives in equal shares, with remainder to their children, is not too remote where the nephews and nieces were all alive at the testator's death, inasmuch as the latest period at which the estate could vest in their children is at the end of the lives of their respective ancestors, the tenants for life; but a limitation to the children of after-born nephews or nieces would be void for remoteness, for the share of each such child would not vest until the death of his parent who was not in being at the death of the testator, and this would not necessarily be within the period of the rule against perpetuities. [a] Illustrations.—(1) A gift of a residuary estate to the testator's sons equally, as and when they should respectively attain twenty-four years of age, is a gift to a class which cannot be ascertained until all the members of it shall have attained twenty-four, and therefore the gift is void for remoteness. Wilkinson v. Duncan, 30 Beav. 111, 54 Reprint 831. (2) A gift of property to a testator's widow for life or until her remarriage, with remainder to those children of a designated living person who should attain the age of twenty-five years, is void for remoteness as to such remainder, for at the death or remarriage of the widow the class of remaindermen would close if any of them had then attained the age of twenty-five, and such class might include children under the age of four years who consequently would not attain the age of twenty-five within the period allowed by the rule against perpetuities. Reid v. Earle, 18 Austr. C. L. R. 493.

[b] Contingent character of technically "vested" interests.—(1) "Gifts over to a class, where the class is open until some future time, are technically vested (unless they are made expressly subject to some other contingency), if there be one or more of the class in esse at the time of the making of the gift. Nevertheless, from the standpoint of the perpetuity rule, they stand on the same footing as purely contingent gifts, since the final membership of the class, and, hence, the actual ascertainment of the persons who will take, will not be determined until the time fixed for the closing of the class. And when the time fixed for the closing of the class is so remote as to conflict with the perpetuity rule, the gift is void." McGill v. New Jersey Trust Co., 94 N. J. Eq. 657, 665, 121 A 760. (2) "The placing this class of remainders under the head of vested remainders is to some extent artificial. Such a remainder is vested, in so far as it is certain that whenever and however the preceding estate determines there will be one or more persons who will surely come into possession of the land, but in so far as it is not certain what the number of those persons will be, or in other words as the number and consequent size of the shares is contingent, the remainder cannot be truly said to be in all respects vested. The imperfect character of the vesting in this class of cases is brought out by the application of the rule against perpetuities. Interests which are truly and in all respects vested, never come within the rule, but when there is permitted period;[27] but if the number of shares will necessarily be determined within the period of the rule the limitation is not objectionable.[28]

[§ 47] 2. Independent Limitations. When interests or estates in property are limited to the members of a class of persons in such terms that the amount or extent of the interest given to each member is unaffected by the number of members or the existence or nonexistence of the other members,[29] as where a definite sum of money is given to each of the persons who may be or come within a certain description or designation,[30] then a gift or share which will necessarily vest, if at all, in one member of the class within the limits specified by the rule against perpetuities is not rendered objectionable to that rule by the remoteness of a gift to another member.[31]

Limitations to independent classes. On the same principle, when interests or estates are limited to distinct classes, in each of which the number of members or shares is independent of the number in the others, although all the classes may be designated by the same general words of limitation, the validity of a limitation to a class in all of whose members the interest or estate limited will necessarily vest within the permitted period is unaffected by the remoteness of the gift to another of the classes.[32]

[§ 48] 3. Limitations to Persons Attaining Specified Age—a. In General. When property is limited to such of the children or grandchildren of a designated living person as attain a specified age, and a living member of the class has attained that age at the time at which the limitation is created, the gift is not too remote,[33] the class consisting only of those children or grandchildren who are then alive,[34] so that they must attain the specified age, if at all, within lives (their own) in being at the creation of the estate.[35] A limitation to take effect at an age not greater than twenty-one years is not too remote when made to the children of a living person,[36] or to the grandchildren of a testator by whose will the gift is made or of another person dead at the time the estate is created,[37] although no member of the class then living has attained the specified age at that time, for, the class closing when any one member reaches the age specified,[38] it is consequently impossible for the ascertainment of the individuals who will attain the prescribed age to be postponed more than twenty-one years after lives (of their parents) in being at the creation of the estate.[39] And when the age at which the limitation is to vest a gift in remainder to a class which has become vested in a living person, if the number of persons who will finally constitute the class may not be determined until a remote period, the remainder is void. . . . This is apparently an exception to the rule that vested interests are never too remote, but in truth remainders of this sort, although called vested are not really so; at a certain point, and on the point which the rule against perpetuities touches, they are, in fact, contingent." 39. Limitation remaining contingent until ascertainment of membership valid if necessarily vesting is greater than twenty-one years, even though no person is alive at the creation of the estate who has then attained that age, the limitation is good if the class consists of the children of a testator by whose will the gift is made or of another person dead at the creation of the estate,[40] for the class is closed and its members will attain the specified age, if at all, within lives (their own) then in being.[41] But when the class to whom an estate is limited upon attaining a specified age includes the grandchildren of a person living at the creation of the estate, whether the specified age be under or over twenty-one years,[42] or when it includes the children of a living person, or the grandchildren of one deceased leaving a child or children him surviving, and the specified age is greater than twenty-one years,[43] and no member of the class living at the creation of the limitation has then attained the age specified, the limitation is void for remoteness, inasmuch as the first member of the class to attain such age may be one born after the creation of the estate, in the case of such a limitation to children, or the child of such a one, in the case of a limitation to grandchildren.[44]

[§ 49] b. When Youngest Child or Grandchild Attains Specified Age. A fortiori, upon the principles governing the validity of limitations to persons attaining a specified age,[45] a limitation to the children of a person living at the creation of the estate, or to the grandchildren of any person, whether living or not at its creation, except when both parent and grandparent are then dead,[46] to take effect when the youngest of them reaches an age exceeding twenty-one years, is too remote;[47] but a limitation vesting upon the attainment of an age not exceeding twenty-one years by the youngest child of a person living at the creation of the estate or the youngest grandchild of one then deceased is not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities.[48]

[§ 50] c. Limitations Over to Children of Children Dying under Specified Age.[49] When an interest or estate in property is limited to such of the children of a designated person as attain a specified age, a limitation over of the share of any child dying under that age to such of his children as attain the age is void for remoteness, even though the age specified does not exceed twenty-one years,[50] for while the limits of the classes will necessarily be determined within a life (that of the designated parent) in being at the creation of the estate and twenty-one years thereafter, the individuals who will attain the specified age and, consequently, the minimum number of shares, may not be ascertainable until after the expiration of that period.[51]

[a] It was formerly held (1) that a devise of a life estate to the unborn children of a living person, with remainder over, was void under the rule against perpetuities, such holding apparently confusing the invalidity of the remainder over with the validity of the preceding life estate. Teale, 6 Hare 239, 31 EngCh 239, 67 Reprint 1155); (3) and the principle stated in the text is now generally followed (see cases infra notes 56–60).

[b] Principle applied.—A devise of a life estate upon condition to the sons of the testator, and upon breach of the condition to the inmates of a designated charitable institution for the residue of a life estate, is not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, even though some of such inmates may be unborn at the death of the testator, since the limitation over must take effect, if at all, within lives in being at the testator's death. [a] Thus (1) a testamentary gift of property to trustees to hold it for a period of twenty-five years after the testator's death and to pay the income to his children, or in case of their death to their children, offends the rule against perpetuities, for it is possible that an interest may vest more than twenty-one years, plus the period of gestation, after the death of the testator, in descendants of a deceased child who were not born or in being at the time of the testator's death. Closset v. Burtchaell, 112 Or. 585, 230 P 554. (2) A gift to trustees of property to be held by them for twenty-five years from the testator's death, the income to be payable to named persons and upon their death to their children, and at the end of twenty-five years the capital to be paid to such named persons or to the surviving children of any of them who should then be deceased, or to the survivors of the first takers in case of the death of one of them without issue surviving at the expiration of the term of twenty-five years, is void for remoteness, both as to principal and income, inasmuch as it cannot be determined, under all possibilities, within the life of a first taker and twenty-one years thereafter, whether the income or principal would go to her children, or, by reason of their decease, to the surviving first takers, and a share may therefore not vest within the period of the rule against perpetuities. Sears v. Putnam, 102 Mass. 5. (3) A testamentary gift to those children of the testator's son who should be living at the expiration of twenty-eight years from the death of the testator is void for remoteness; for if the son had any children born to him at any time within seven years from the testator's death, the vesting of their interests would be suspended for more than twenty-one years. Palmer v. Holford, 4 Russ. 403, 4 EngCh 403, 38 Reprint 857. (4) A gift to one and his issue, and upon the failure thereof to the daughters then living of a person in being at the creation of the estate, is void for remoteness as to the lim-

Life estates to unborn persons in succession are not in violation of the rule against perpetuities if they all must vest within the limits, after their creation, specified by that rule.[62]

Attainment of age beyond twenty-one. While a limitation or gift of an interest or estate to the unborn child of a person in being at the creation of the estate which is to vest in him when he shall attain an age not exceeding twenty-one years is valid,[63] a limitation to such child to vest only upon his attainment of an age beyond twenty-one years is void for remoteness.[64]

[§ 52] b. Grandchildren. A gift or limitation of an interest or estate in property to the unborn grandchildren of a testator by whose will the gift is made,[65] or of another person dead at the creation of itation over, since it may not take effect within lives in being and twenty-one years thereafter. Jee v. Audley, 1 Cox Ch. 324, 29 Reprint 1186. (5) A direction in a will that the income from property should be accumulated for the purpose of paying off subsisting mortgages thereon, and thereafter claimant thereof should divide the property among such of the testator's grandchildren as might then be surviving, is void for remoteness, for the time at which the mortgages are paid off may or may not be within the period specified by the rule against perpetuities. Blight v. Hartnoll, 19 Ch. D. 294. (6) A devise to the testator's daughter for life, "and at her death to her bodily heirs, if the said bodily heirs have issue, forever," with remainder over in case such bodily heirs die without issue, is void for remoteness as to the fee thereby attempted to be given to the unborn issue of the daughter, since it remains contingent until the birth of a child of an unborn person, and therefore will not necessarily vest, if at all, within a life in being and twenty-one years thereafter. Shepperd v. Fisher, 206 Mo. 208, 242, 103 SW 989. See Bunting v. Hromas, 104 Nebr. 383, 177 NW 190 (apparently making a similar application of the principle stated in the text).

Act (1925) § 163 in substance that "where in a will, settlement or other instrument the absolute vesting either of capital or income of property, or the ascertainment of a beneficiary or class of beneficiaries, is made to depend on the attainment by the beneficiary or members of the class of an age exceeding twenty-one years, and thereby the gift to that beneficiary or class or any member thereof, or any gift over, remainder, executory limitation, or trust arising on the total or partial failure of the original gift is, or but for the section would be, rendered void for remoteness, the will, settlement or other instrument shall take effect for the purposes of such gift, gift over, remainder, executory limitation, or trust as if the absolute vesting or ascertainment aforesaid had been made to depend on the beneficiary or member of the class attaining the age of twenty-one years, and that age shall be substituted for the age stated in the will, settlement, or other instrument. This rule applies to any instrument executed after the end of 1925 and to any testamentary appointment (whether made in exercise of a general or special power), devise, or bequest contained in the will of a person dying after that date, whether the will was made before or after that date; and it applies without prejudice to any provision whereby the absolute vesting or ascertainment is also made to depend on the marriage of any person, or any other event which may occur before the age stated in the will, settlement, or other instrument is attained." Eng.—Re Backhouse, [1921] 2 Ch. 51.

[a] Reason for rule.—A remainder limited by will to the testator's grandchildren, to take effect after life estates of the testator's children, is valid, since the number of grandchildren must be ascertained at the death of the testator's children, and all his children must be begotten before his death. Goffe v. Goffe, 37 R. I. 542, 94 A 2, AnnCas the limitation,[66] which is to vest, if at all, at or before the death of their parents, or other person or persons in being at the creation of the interest whose lives measure the period of postponement,[67] or at or before such grandchildren,[68] or the youngest of them,[69] attain an age not exceeding twenty-one years,[70] is not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, because the persons who are to take thereunder must necessarily be ascertained within the time permitted by the rule after the creation of the interest; but if it may remain contingent beyond such time it is too remote.[71] A limitation to the unborn grandchildren of a living person is void for remoteness,[72] except where it is restricted to those living at a time not later than the expiration of the period after its creation specified by the rule against perpetuities,[73] inasmuch as grandchildren may be born at a time beyond the period specified by the rule, to children yet unborn at the creation of the interest.

[§ 53] c. Children of Person Not in Being. A gift or limitation of an interest or estate to the child of a person not in being at the creation of the limitation is, when not restricted to a birth and vesting occurring within the period of the rule against perpetuities, void for remoteness,[74] inasmuch as such child may not be born within twenty-one years after the death of persons in being at such creation;[75] but if, by the terms of the gift or limitation, such unborn child must be born and take, if at all, within the period specified by the rule, the rule is not violated and the interest limited is not too remote.[76] It should be noted, however, that apart from the question of remoteness under the rule Thackerell, 2 Ves. Jr. 238, 30 Reprint 612 (where a bequest to establish a school at which testator's grandchildren should be educated between the ages of seven and fourteen years was held not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, although in so far as it attempted to establish a permanent charity the bequest was held void under the mortmain acts).

[a] Reason for principle.—A testamentary limitation of property to the testator's grandchildren to take effect when the youngest grandchild then or thereafter born should reach, or if living would have reached, the age of twenty-one years, is not void for remoteness; the estate must vest within the period of lives in being and twenty-one years and the period of gestation thereafter, for there can be no child born to any of the testator's children who would not attain the age of twenty-one years within the period prescribed by the rule. McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 340, 5 SCt 652, 28 L. ed. 1015; Otterback v. Bohrer, 87 Va. 548, 12 SE 1013.

[a] Thus a devise of property to the testator's children for life, and to a surviving spouse of any such child for life, with remainder to the children of such child then surviving, is void for remoteness as to the remainder. [a] Limitation by deed to grantor's grandchildren.—A deed conveying a life estate in property to the grantor's daughter, with remainder at her death "to the grandchildren" of the grantor, the grantor having other children living, is void for remoteness so far as concerns the remainder, where there is no evidence of intention to confine it to those grandchildren who are in esse at the end of the life estate, inasmuch as the other children of the grantor might have children born more than twenty-one years and ten months after the expiration of the lives of both the grantor and life tenant, so that the class to whom the remainder was given would thereby be required to open and let in such new members at a time beyond the period permitted by the rule against perpetuities. [b] Gift to testator's great-grandchildren.—A devise of property for life to a testatrix's children and grandchildren, with remainder at their death to her great-grandchildren, is void for remoteness. "It is obvious that each of the children of testatrix might have had children born after her death. . . . It is equally obvious that such afterborn grandchildren of testatrix might have children born to them more than 21 years and ten months after the death of their respective parents, hence it is clear that . . . the will attempted to postpone the vesting of these estates for more than a life or lives in being and twenty-one years and ten months thereafter, hence the limitation of the remainder in fee to testatrix's great-grandchildren created a perpetuity forbidden by the common law." Albert v. Albert, 68 Md. 352, 12 A 11. (2) A devise of a life estate in property to the testator's granddaughter, with remainder to the testator's great-grandchildren, is not too remote as to the remainder over, since it must take effect, if at all, at the termination of a life in being, and therefore only those great-grandchildren who are then living can take interests. [§ 54] 2. Limitations Over after Limitation to Unborn Person.[78] A remainder over, after a valid[79] preceding interest or estate limited to one not in being at the time of its creation,[80] is not too remote if it is vested[81] at its creation in an ascertained person[82] or corporation,[83] or will necessarily become so vested, if at all, within the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities.[84] And an executory limitation over after an interest or estate previously so limited to one unborn at its creation is good if it must necessarily vest, if at all, within the period of the rule after its creation.[85] But if a contingent remainder or executory limitation over after such an interest or estate may not become vested until a time after its creation beyond the period specified by the rule against perpetuities,[86] as, for example, if its vesting may be postponed until the death of the unborn taker of the preceding estate,[87] it is void for remoteness. Lane v. Garrison, 293 Mo. 530, 239 SW 813. In re Bowles, [1902] 2 Ch. 650. (3) Where a testamentary trust was directed to terminate at the death of the survivor of three persons living at the testator's death, a provision for the payment of a share of the income of the trust property to a son of a grandson of the testator born after the latter's death does not violate the rule against perpetuities. [b] "The distinction resides in this: A devise to the unborn child of an unborn child, eo nomine, is void, because it may not take effect within a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years and the fraction of a year thereafter; but when by the express terms of the devise the limitation over must take effect within the life or lives of persons in being, then the reason supporting the objection fails, and the limitation is good." to the issue, as purchasers, of a person not in being at the creation of the interest to whom a preceding life estate is given, is void,[88] unless it be restricted to take effect only if the death of the life tenant shall occur within the period specified by the rule after the creation of the estate;[89] and a cross remainder or executory cross limitation to be effective upon the death without issue of one of two or more unborn tenants in common, who take in remainder after a life estate of one in being at the creation of the estate, is void,[90] unless it be confined to a death under twenty-one years of age.[91]

Possibility on a possibility. A limitation over after a gift to a person unborn at the creation of the interest may, aside from the question of remoteness under the rule against perpetuities, be void under the rule against a possibility on a possibility, in those jurisdictions where that rule obtains.[92]

[§ 55] D. Limitations To and Over from Surviving Spouse. The question of the validity of a limitation or gift of an interest or estate in property to the surviving spouse of a designated person arises out of the possibility that the individual who will bear that relation to such designated person at his death may not be born at the creation of the interest.[93] If the gift or limitation is to the surviving spouse of a person in being at the time of its creation, to take effect at or before his death, it is not too remote,[94] whether or not the surviving spouse was in being at the creation of the interest;[95] but if it may remain contingent beyond such period it would seem that it is void for remoteness.[96] Similarly, by the application of the principles relating to gifts to unborn persons[97] and to limitations over after such gifts,[98] a gift or limitation to the surviving spouse of a person unborn at the creation of the interest is, at least when not so restricted by its terms that it must vest, if at all, within the period after its creation specified by the rule against perpetuities, too remote, and therefore void.[99]

A limitation over after a gift to the surviving spouse of a designated person is void for remoteness,[1] upon the principles applying to limitations over after gifts to unborn persons,[2] unless it is vested, or will necessarily become so, if at all, within the period after its creation specified by the rule against perpetuities.[3]

an interest or estate in property to a series of persons, as to those who from time to time may fill a certain position or answer a certain description, is to be distinguished from a limitation to a class of persons,[4] inasmuch as neither the extent nor the duration of the interest to be taken by one member of the series is affected by that of any other members.[5] It would seem, therefore, that as to interests which must necessarily become vested, if at all, in the first[6] and succeeding[7] members of the series within the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities,[8] such a limitation is not obnoxious to that rule; but as to all interests attempted to be given to subsequent members it is void for remoteness.[9] And in some cases such limitations have been held void as to the entire series.[10]

(2) Where land was devised in trust for the benefit of such person as for the time being should succeed to the testator's baronetcy, so long as the rules of law and equity would permit, it was held that the testator's son and heir took a life estate, but the validity of subsequent interests was not decided. Dungannon, 1 Dr. & War. 509] (holding, "for the purpose of accomplishing the intention" under a similar limitation, that the son of the testator took an absolute interest in the property).

7. Gray Perp. §§ 410, 410c. See St. Paul's Church v. Atty.-Gen., 164 Mass. 188, 41 NE 231 (semble). Compare Deerhurst v. St. Albans, 5 Madd. 232, 56 Reprint 883 (where Lord Vere bequeathed chattels in trust for A, his son, for life, and on his death "for such person as shall from time to time be Lord Vere;" after A's death B, who was alive at the testator's death, became Lord V and enjoyed the chattels, and on his death C, his son, became Lord V; and it was held that the limitation was good as to C, his interest vesting at the end of a life in being at the testator's death, but on appeal, sub nom. Tollemache v. Coventry, 8 Bligh N. S. 547, 5 Reprint 1045, 2 Cl. & F. 611, 6 Reprint 1285, this decision was reversed, on the ground among others that A's successor as Lord V might not have been born in the lifetime of the testator, and consequently a gift over on the death of such successor might not have taken effect within the time after the testator's death permitted by the rule against perpetuities). See also Gray Perp. §§ 403, 404 (where the decision is discussed).

[a] Thus (1) a gift of money in trust to make certain payments to the testator's widow during her life, and after her decease and until the fund should be exhausted, to make such payments "to the same persons that would inherit real estate from me under the present laws of the state of Rhode Island had I then died intestate, and in the same proportions that they would inherit such real estate from me," was held void so far as it provided for any payments after the death of the wife; and the court said: "Coming now to the time of the death of the wife . . . we find a gift of the residue of said payments as they become due for the benefit of a class composed of the persons who answer the description of his heirs at law. . . . Inasmuch as this gift is to a class which includes persons who might not be ascertained until after a life in being and twenty-one years afterward, it is void under the rule that a gift to a class is void unless the whole class must be ascertainable within the period allowed by the Rule." Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Peck, 40 R. I. 519, 522, 525, 101 A 430 [cit Williams v. Herrick, 19 R. I. 197, 32 A 913 (where property was given to the testator's wife for life and then to trustees to erect a building and to manage the estate and accumulate the income, and whenever the accumulation should reach such proportions that the trustees should deem it advisable to pay dividends therefrom to such of the testator's heirs as should present satisfactory proof of their rights thereto, and the whole limitation after the death of the wife was held void as a perpetuity; but it would seem clear that the first payment therein provided for might not be made within the period of the rule against perpetuities, and thus the rights of all members of the series would of course be too remote)]. (2) A testator gave bank stock to trustees to collect and receive, during the corporate existence of the bank, the dividends declared thereon from time to time, and upon the first days of January in each year to divide and distribute such dividends among all the employees of such bank, and the entire trust was held void on the ground that it was "to continue" more than twenty-one years from the death of the testator, since renewals of the corporate charter of the bank might cause it to continue in existence for a longer period. Siedler v. Syms, 56 N. J. Eq. 275, 38 A 424. But see Gray Perp. §§ 401b–401d (where it was said that "the decision in Siedler v. Syms, supra, seems to be due to the error which we have so often seen creeping in, the failure to bear in mind that the purpose of the Rule against Perpetuities is to prevent the creation of remote future interests, not to prevent restraints upon the alienation of present interests," and that the trust should have been allowed to be good as to the first twenty-one annual payments after the testator's death, inasmuch as the amount of each payment and its distribution were in no way affected by the existence or nonexistence, or the validity or invalidity, of any subsequent payment). (3) Where chattels were bequeathed in trust for the persons who should for the time being be entitled to certain realty, which was devised by the same instrument to A for life, remainder to B for life, remainder to B's first and other sons in tail, with remainders over, all interests in the chattels beyond the life interest of B were held void. Wainman v. Fields, Kay 507, 69 Reprint 215. But see Gray Perp. § 409 (asserting that the gift to the first tenant in tail, who must take on B's death, should have been held good). (4) Where a testator devised land to his son for his life, and after his death to his descendants for their lives, "and so on," with a limitation over in case of a death without posterity, the entire will was held void, on the ground that an executory devise which exceeds the limit permitted by the rule against perpetuities is wholly void, and cannot be held void as to the excess only and valid as to the preceding part, as would be the case in a direction for accumulation beyond the prescribed period. tingent limitation over to an individual or private corporation after a limitation to a charitable institution or to trustees for such a use,[14] is ordinarily void for remoteness if the contingency may occur at a time beyond the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities;[15] but an exception is made in the case of a limitation over from one charity to another, and it is not too remote, although it will or may take effect after the prescribed period.[16]

VI. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF THE RULE

[§ 58] A. In General.[17] A limitation of an interest or estate in property which will not necessarily[18] become vested within or at the end of the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities[19] is wholly void ab initio,[20] and, unless otherwise provided by statute,[21] the property covered by such limitation passes to those persons who would have been entitled thereto had the limitation been omitted

See Gray Perp. §§ 597–603i (where this exception is criticized).

"It is said that the rule against perpetuities has no application to charitable trusts. It is, indeed, a striking characteristic of such trusts that they continue forever. They are not, however, exempt from the rule, barring one very important exception. . . . If a gift be to charity, then over to an individual, or to an individual, then over to charity, the rule is effective, and has perfect application. But a gift to charity, then over to charity, forms the exception, and this is sustained upon the reasoning that, as one charitable use may be made perpetual, speaking in a general and natural sense, the gift to two in succession can be of no longer duration or of greater evil. The property is taken out of commerce, and goes instantly into perpetual servitude to charity. While the form of charity may vary, and a succeeding form become effective, contrary to the rule, the primary object, that of charity, continues and is allowable, through the law's regard for charitable uses, and in consideration of the beneficial results flowing therefrom." [a] Where there is no change of trustee, but the beneficial interest is limited over from one charitable use to another upon a contingency which may happen beyond the limits of the rule against perpetuities, the same principle applies and the limitation to the second charity is not void for remoteness. [§ 59] B. Effect of Remoteness of Limitation upon Other Limitations[23]—1. Prior Limitations. Except when a series of limitations forms such a scheme of distribution that no one of them can be separated from the others without defeating the organic plan of the donor or testator,[24] the invalidity of a limitation on account of remoteness will not affect the validity of preceding limitations which are otherwise good,[25] but they will take effect as if the subsequent invalid limitation had not been made.[26] Thus, when a qualified or determinable legal or equitable interest or estate, or one less than a fee or absolute ownership, is followed by a limitation which is void for remoteness, the preceding estate takes effect and comes to an end by its own limitation,[27]

and the remainder reverts to the donor or falls into his estate;[28] and where a preceding estate is subject to be divested or defeated by a limitation over which is void for remoteness, the divesting limitation alone fails and the preceding estate vests free of it.[29] In the latter case, the effect of holding the limitation over void for remoteness is to enlarge the preceding estate, but such enlargement is only incidental to the operation of the rule against perpetuities and arises out of the nature of the limitations and not out of the rule.[30]

Modifications of absolute gift rendering it in part remote. Upon the principle applicable to a divesting limitation which is too remote,[31] an absolute gift of an interest or estate, followed by an attempted modification which would make it in part too remote, is itself sustained, and the modification alone is rejected.[32] was held that the appointment by the donee was valid only to the extent that it exercised the power conferred upon her, and that the attempted limitation of the children's estate to a life estate, with remainder to their issue, was void, and "hence" the donee's children took the property in fee).

[b] Where independent gifts are

[§ 60] 2. Subsequent Limitations.[33] Although it would seem that a vested interest, or an interest which will become vested, if at all, within the period of the rule against perpetuities,[34] should not be invalidated by the remoteness of a limitation of a preceding estate,[35] a limitation for life to a living person has been held void when it follows an interest which is too remote,[36] and in general it is the rule that any limitation depending or expectant upon a prior limitation which is void for remoteness is invalid.[37]

VII. POWERS[38]

[§ 61] A. In General. The rule against perpetuities applies as well to powers over property as to interests and estates therein.[39] A power which is exercisable only at a time within the period after its creation specified by the rule,[40] or, in the case of powers of appointment, a power under which the donee can appoint to himself at a time within the prescribed period,[41] is not open to objection on the ground of remoteness; but, with the exception mentioned as to powers of appointment,[42] a power is void if by the terms of its creation the event, if any, upon which it becomes operative may not happen within such period and the donee may be in existence at a time beyond such period, so that it is capable in any possible event of being exercised at a time beyond the limits of the rule.[43] Thus, when a power is given to a person or persons in being at the time of its creation, or to the survivor of them, if more than one, but not to their representatives or successors,[44] or when it can be exercised only in favor of a person living at the date of its creation,[45] it must necessarily be exercised, if at all, within, or at the end of, a life in being, and therefore is not objectionable on the ground of remoteness. Similar-made to several persons by one description (1) a modifying clause will be rejected only as to those gifts which the modification would render too remote. In re Rousseau, 48 S. D. 501, 205 NW 222; In re Ferneley, [1902] 1 Ch. 543; In re Russell, [1895] 2 Ch. 698. (2) Independent gifts to members of a class see supra § 47.

Wickman, 233 Ill. 39, 84 NE 38, 17 LRANS 216 (dictum). Compare Gray Perp. § 257 (where the cases supporting the statement of the text are examined and criticized, and the author concludes: "As it [the doctrine that a limitation for life to a living person is void if it follows an interest which is too remote] introduces an arbitrary element into the Rule against Perpetuities, and defeats the intentions of testators without any pretext of public policy, under the false pretence of supporting them, it is submitted that it ought not to be followed in America").

[a] The leading case, and the one in which the doctrine was first announced, is Beard v. Westcott, in which the limitation of the life estate was held good by the court of common pleas (5 Taunt. 393, 1 ECL 208, 128 Reprint 741), but on appeal was held void by the court of king's bench (5 B. & Ald. 801, 7 ECL 435, 106 Reprint 1383); and the certificate of the judges was later confirmed by the lord chancellor (Turn. & R. 25, 12 EngCh 24, 37 Reprint 1002), although it does not appear that the point mentioned was raised before him.

[b] Reason for decisions.—"The Court [of King's Bench] held [in Beard v. Westcott, supra] that the gift over was void, not because it was not within the line of perpetuity, but expressly on the ground . . . that limitation over was never intended by the testator to take effect, unless the persons whom he intended to take under the previous limitation would, if they had been alive, been capable of enjoying the estate, and that he did not intend that the estate should wait for persons to take in a given event, where the person to take was actually in existence, but could not take; and Lord Eldon affirmed that decision. This shows that where there are gifts over which are void for perpetuity, and there is a subsequent and independent clause on a gift over which is within the line of perpetuities, effect cannot be given to such a clause unless it will dovetail in and accord with previous limitations which are valid." Monypenny v. Dering, 2 De G. M. & G. 145, 182, 51 EngCh 112, 42 Reprint 826 (per Lord St. Leonards, C., who as Sir Edward Sugden was of counsel in Beard v. Westcott, supra). But see Crozier v. Crozier, 3 Dr. & War. 353 (where it was held by Sugden, when lord chancellor of Ireland, that an appointment by the donee of a power to his wife, who was not an object of the power, for her life, and then to his oldest son, who was one of the objects of the power, in fee, was void as to the wife but good as to the son).

[a] A bequest to charity is void when it is dependent upon an estate which is too remote. Ledwith v. Hurst, 284 Pa. 94, 130 A 315.

[b] "The reason appears to be that the persons entitled under the subsequent limitation are not intended to take unless and until the prior limitation is exhausted; and as the prior limitation which is void for remoteness can never come into operation, much less be exhausted, it is impossible to give effect to the intentions of the settlor in favour of the beneficiaries under the subsequent limitation." 45. In re De Sommery, [1912] 2 Ch. 622.

ly, if by the terms of the creation of a power a period not exceeding that prescribed by the rule against perpetuities is limited for its exercise, it cannot be too remote.[46] But if the donee of a power is or at any time within the period during which the power is exercisable may be a person not in being at the time of its creation, the power is invalid,[47] unless its exercise is expressly restricted to a time within the limits of the rule against perpetuities,[48] and except where the power is one of appointment and the donee can by deed appoint the property to himself in fee at a time within the period prescribed by the rule.[49]

Ascertainment of donee. In accordance with the principles just stated, and by analogy to the rules relating to the vesting of interests in property,[50] a power is void for remoteness if the donee is not a person necessarily ascertainable, if ever, within the period after the creation of the power prescribed by the rule against perpetuities.[51]

Alternative powers.[52] When two or more distinct powers of appointment are created over the same property, the one to be exercised in default of exercise of the other, one of them which will be necessarily exercised, if at all, within the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities is good, notwithstanding another or others may be exercisable at a time too remote.[53] But a power will not be separated by the court where the donor himself has not done so.[54]

[§ 62] B. Powers To Appoint[55]—1. Creation[56]—a. In General. The general rule that a power is invalid if it is capable of being exercised at a time beyond the period specified by the rule against perpetuities[57] is subject to the exception that, when a general power to appoint property in fee is exercisable by the donee by deed at a time within the prescribed period, rather than by will or testament only, the power is equivalent to a grant of absolute ownership, since the donee can at any time appoint to himself,[58] and the power is therefore not bad even when given to one not in existence at the time of its creation, if he will necessarily come into being, if at all, and attain full age, within the period of the rule.[59] But such a power is void if it can be exercised only upon the performance of a condition or the happening of an event which may not occur at a time within the limits of the rule against perpetuities,[60] as when the donee is a person not in being at its creation and the power is exercisable only with the consent of other persons,[61] or only upon the marriage of the donee.[62]

[§ 63] b. Possibility of Remote Appointment. Only appointments actually made are to be considered in determining whether interests or estates in property limited by the donee of a power in its exercise are valid under the rule against perpetuities,[63] except, perhaps, when the direct and specific object of the power, according to its terms, is to create a perpetuity;[64] and the possibility that an appointment which would be too remote might be made under the terms of a power which may be completely executed without violating the rule will not invalidate the power itself or an appointment which satisfies the rule.[65]

[a] A general power of appointment exercisable by deed (1) and not by will only, is not within the rule against perpetuities. "If a man has the present unconditioned right to acquire the present absolute interest, he is regarded by the rule against perpetuities as already having such interest. . . . A donee of a general power to be exercised by deed (not by will) is such a person because he can appoint to himself and therefore is practically the owner." Lewis Oyster Co. v. West, 93 Conn. 518, 532, 107 A 138. (2) "If a man who has a vested limited interest in property has the present unconditioned right to turn that limited interest into an absolute interest, and thus to acquire the present unconditioned absolute interest, he is regarded by the rule against perpetuities as already having such interest. A tenant in tail is such a person; a life tenant with a general power exercisable by deed is also such a person. To this extent the rule sacrifices form to substance, but the substance must be there. There must be a person with a vested limited interest who has the immediate right to become the present absolute owner. Such is not the case when a life tenant has a power which he can exercise only by will. The general rule must govern unless the exception is made out, and the exception is not made out unless there be a present right to acquire the present absolute interest." [§ 64] c. Effect of Remoteness of Power.[66] Where a power of appointment is void for remoteness, a limitation to take effect in default of any appointment under the power is not thereby invalidated.[67]

[§ 65] 2. Execution[68]—a. In General. An appointment of property made in the exercise of a power other than a general power of appointment exercisable by deed[69] is void unless the interest or estate appointed must nesessarily become vested in the appointee within the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities,[70] reckoned from the date of the creation of the power, and not from the date of its exercise.[71] This is upon the principle that the vesting of property is in effect the act of the donor of the power and that he cannot confer upon another the right to do that which he himself could not do.[72] Accordingly, it has many times been said that limitations of property made in the exercise of a power of appointment are to be treated, so far as concerns questions of remoteness, as if they had been written into the instrument by which the power was created in place of the power itself;[73] but this statement is subject to the qualification that an interest or estate so appointed which, under the circumstances existing at the date of the appointment, will necessarily vest in the appointee within the prescribed time after the creation of the power will not be held invalid under the rule against perpetuities, because it was not apparent at such creation that an interest or estate so appointed would necessarily vest within such period, or because, under other circumstances which might have arisen subsequent to the creation of the power, such an appointment would have been void.[74]

[§ 66] b. General Power Exercisable by Deed.[75] When a donee is given a general power to appoint to whomsoever he may choose, which is exercisable by deed at a time within the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities,[76] he is regarded as having the absolute ownership,[77] and the period within which an interest or estate appointed by him must vest in the appointee in order to avoid the objection of remoteness is computed from the date of the appointment rather than from the date of the creation of the power,[78] even though in fact the appointment is made by will.[79]

A general power exercisable only by will has in a few cases been held to make the donee so far the equivalent of the absolute owner that the remoteness of an appointment made by him is to be computed with reference to the date of the appointment rather than the date of the creation of the power;[80] but such decisions have been criticized,[81] and the weight of authority seems to be otherwise.[82]

[§ 67] C. Powers To Sell and Similar Powers—1. In General. Although it is a general rule that a power is void if it may possibly be exercised at a time beyond the limits prescribed by the rule against perpetuities,[83] a power to sell property, although unlimited as to time, is ordinarily considered not obnoxious to the rule, inasmuch as it must, unless otherwise provided, or otherwise required by the nature of the purposes for which it is created, be exercised within a reasonable time,[84] and a reasonable time is ordinarily less than the period specified by the rule;[85] and, a fortiori, a power to sell during, or at the expiration of, a life in being at its creation,[86] or within twenty-one years after its creation[87] or after such life,[88] or before or at, but not after, the expiration of an estate tail commencing within the prescribed time,[89] is not void for remoteness.[90] But if by its terms such a power is to be exercised at a time which may be beyond the expiration of such period, it is too remote.[91]

Remote limitation of proceeds. A power to sell property does not fail merely because of a direction to the donee to use the proceeds for a purpose which offends against the rule against perpetuities, but such proceeds are disposed of as in other cases of remote limitations.[92]

[§ 68] 2. Sale To Pay Debts or Legacies.[93] A power to sell property in order that the proceeds thereof may be used for the payment of debts or legacies is ordinarily not objectionable to the rule against perpetuities, both because it must be exercised within a reasonable time,[94] and because the creditors or legatees have a present interest in the property or its proceeds, of the nature of a charge, and so may compel the donee of the owner to exercise it at once.[95] into the original instrument' . . . is true if understood of the validity of an appointment. It is not true if understood of the meaning of the words used in making an appointment." Gray Perp. § 523b.

[b] Thus (1) when a life tenant with power of appointment appoints to his child, to vest when he reaches the age of twenty-five years, the appointment is good under the rule against perpetuities if such child will necessarily attain the specified age within twenty-one years after the death of his parent, but not otherwise. [a] Reason for principle.—"When a man has the present absolute interest in property, he can deal with it without regard to the previous history of the title. In applying the Rule against Perpetuities to any settlement or devise he may make, it is unnecessary to consider what limitations the property was subject to before it came into his hands. And if a man has the present unconditioned right to acquire the present absolute interest, he is regarded by the Rule against Perpetuities as already having such interest. A tenant in tail is such a person; a donee of a general power exercisable by deed is also such a person. To this extent the Rule sacrifices form to substance; but the substance must be there." [§ 69] 3. Sale, Lease, Mortgage, or Exchange of Settled Property.[96] In accordance with the principle that a power is invalid if it is exercisable at a time beyond the period specified by the rule against perpetuities,[97] a power to sell, lease, mortgage, or exchange property settled in trust is, in general, void if, in view of the purposes for which it is created, it may be exercised more than twenty-one years after lives in being,[98] as during the lifetime of a person unborn at the creation of the power,[99] or at the end of a period or the happening of an event which may carry it beyond the limits prescribed by the rule.[1] But if a legal fee in the property covered by the power will necessarily become vested in possession within lives in being at the creation of the power, the purposes of the power in the usual case will be spent and the power cease at or within a reasonable time after such vesting,[2] and as a reasonable time is ordinarily less than twenty-one years, the power in such case is therefore not too remote;[3] and even when it is construed not so to cease, if such a power is thereafter exercisable only with the consent of the owner of the fee, it is not too remote, for such owner can at any time convey the fee and thereby render himself incapable of consenting to a sale under the power.[4] And when an equitable fee is vested in possession or will necessarily become so within the period prescribed by the rule, a power to sell is not obnoxious to the rule, for it will either cease, upon the same principles as in the case of a legal fee vested in possession,[5] or the equitable owner will be entitled to call for a conveyance of the legal title and thereby can destroy the power or cause it to cease.[6]

Power to raise money to discharge mortgage. Upon the same principles, a power to raise money out of property for the payment of a mortgage existing at the creation of the power is not too remote, although unlimited as to time, where the property is vested or will necessarily become so within the period of the rule against perpetuities, for the owner of the fee or tenant in tail can pay the encumbrance and thereby destroy the power.[7]

A power attendant upon an estate tail is good, for any tenant in tail can destroy it.[8]

[§ 70] 4. Sale of Mortgaged Property. In accordance with the principles governing the validity of powers in general,[9] a power given in a mortgage to the mortgagee to sell the mortgaged property in case of default is clearly unobjectionable to the rule against perpetuities when the default must occur, if at all, within the period prescribed by the rule;[10]

[a] "To sum up the law as to powers in connection with settled property:—(1) Sometimes the power ceases as soon as the equitable fee or absolute interest vests in possession: (2) Sometimes the power can be exercised until the owner of the equitable fee or absolute interest calls for the legal estate: (3) Sometimes the power can be exercised within a reasonable time after the fee or absolute interest has vested in possession, such reasonable time being not over twenty-one years after lives in being: (4) Sometimes the power is created to be exercised on a contingency which may happen after the legal fee or absolute interest has vested in possession, and which may be more than twenty-one years after a life in being. In the first three cases the power is not void for remoteness; in the last case it is." Pulitzer v. Livingston, 89 Me. 359, 368, 36 A 635.

[b] "The true reason for holding such powers good is that the trusts to which they are attached must come to an end, or can be destroyed, within the limits fixed by the Rule against Perpetuities. This is the case in ordinary settlements or wills where the property is settled or devised for life with remainders in tail, or for life only, as is more common in America. The life estates are usually for lives in being; the estates tail can be barred; and when, by the expiration of the life estates and estates tail or by the barring of the estates tail, the ultimate remainder-man in fee is entitled to possession, he either gets the legal estate or he is entitled to call upon the trustee for a conveyance of it. If he gets the legal title, the power at once disappears. If he has only the equitable fee, but is entitled to call for the legal estate from the trustees, the power is sometimes considered as ceasing at once; and even if the intention is that the power shall continue in the trustees until conveyance, yet it is not too remote; for the owner of the equitable fee can destroy it at any time by demanding a conveyance." and it has been held that, even where the default may occur at a time beyond such period, the power of sale is not obnoxious to the rule, but is incidental to the present interest of the mortgagee.[11]

VIII. TRUSTS

[§ 71] A. Private Trusts[12]—1. In General—a. Duration of Trusts.[13] The length of time for which a trusteeship may be limited to continue is to be distinguished from the period for which the vesting of interests or estates in cestuis que trust may be postponed.[14] In general, there is no limitation under the rule against perpetuities upon the permissible duration of a validly created trust, so long as the interests of the cestuis will necessarily vest, if ever, within the period prescribed by the rule,[15] although in some jurisdictions the period for which a trust may be created is restricted by statute.[16] However, when the entire equitable interest or estate in property is absolutely and indefeasibly vested, it has been held that the legal title cannot be indestructibly limited to trustees for a period greater than twenty-one years after lives in being at the creation of the trust,[17] although the prohibition thereof probably arises not out of the rule against perpetuities but out of another rule, in the nature of a rule against suspending the enjoyment or absolute power of alienation, prescribing the same pe-

11. Gilbertson v. Richards, 5 H. & N. 453, 157 Reprint 1258. Compare Gray Perp. § 565 et seq (where it was said: "If there is a power in the mortgage deed authorizing the mortgagee to sell at any time after default, it may be said that as this power can be exercised at any time, it is exercisable at a period more than twenty-one years after lives in being, and is therefore void. But to this it may fairly be said that such power is merely a remedy given to a party to enforce a right which the law would otherwise enforce for him; and if he has a present right and a present remedy, the fact that he may not choose at once to exercise his remedy, and that therefore a title may not be acquired by a sale under the power till a period beyond the limits of remoteness, no more invalidates the power than it would invalidate a title acquired by a sale under order of court in a foreclosure suit. If the condition of the mortgage is such that a failure to fulfil it by the mortgagor may occur more than twenty-one years after lives in being, it will be found more difficult to sustain the rights of the mortgagee. . . . Mortgages in fee for the payment of money or the performance of other acts at a date more than twenty-one years after lives in being have probably been few. The question may be some day presented in connection with railroad mortgages. In view of the large interests likely to be involved, and the novelty of the question, the courts may perhaps sustain the validity of such mortgages. It is to be hoped, should this be the case, that they will frankly declare them an exception to the Rule against Perpetuities, and not, by attempting to reconcile them with the Rule, bring confusion into the Rule itself").

[a] Failure to make this distinction results in apparently conflicting statements of the law, sometimes in the same opinion. For example, it is properly said that "there is no rule which limits the continuance of a trust for any period of time," so long as the beneficial interests will necessarily vest within the period permitted by the rule against perpetuities. And at another point in the opinion it is said that "private trusts . . . cannot be extended beyond the legal limitations of a perpetuity;" but it clearly appears from the context that the court meant that interests cannot be given under a trust in such manner that they may vest at a time beyond the limits of the rule. (2d) 493 (holding that a trust limited by its terms to a period of years less than twenty-one years does not create a perpetuity or impose any legal restraint upon alienation at common law); Hopkinson v. Swaim, 284 Ill. 11, 119 NE 985 (where a spendthrift trust created by the exercise of a testamentary power was held, when referred to the will creating the power, not to continue for a period greater than twenty-one years after lives in being at the donor's death, and therefore was valid within the rule concerning the time a trusteeship may be required to continue); Whiteley v. Babcock, (Mo.) 202 SW 1091 (where a trust to continue until the attainment of his majority by the youngest child of the beneficiary was held not to violate the rule against perpetuities, but it does not appear on what grounds a violation was asserted); Lembeck v. Lembeck, 73 N. J. Eq. 427, 68 A 337 [aff 74 N. J. Eq. 843, 71 A 240] (where a trust of property to continue twenty-five years, the beneficial interest being vested, was treated as merely a provision postponing possession and therefore not within riod.[18] But if each beneficiary has the power to terminate the trust as to his share at any time, the trust is unobjectionable;[19] and the same has been held of a trust terminable at the demand of two thirds of the persons beneficially interested thereunder,[20] but not of one terminable by a majority of them.[21]

[§ 72] b. Vesting of Beneficial Interests—(1) In General. Inasmuch as the rule against perpetuities is the same at law and in equity,[22] and applies equally to legal and equitable interests and estates,[23] the violation of it will no more be tolerated when an interest or estate is covered by a trust than when it is merely legal;[24] and while beneficial interests under a trust which are vested immediately, or will necessarily vest, if ever, within the period prescribed by the rule, are good,[25] even though the trust may continue beyond such time,[26] a limitation under a trust for a noncharitable purpose of an interest or estate which may not vest in the cestui que trust within such period is void for remoteness,[27] notwithstanding the trustee may be given power to sell and the rule against perpetuities).

18. Gray Perp. § 121i; Kales Future Interests § 658. See Armstrong v. Barber, 239 Ill. 389, 88 NE 246 (where a testator vested the beneficial interest in property in his child immediately upon the taking effect of his will, a provision giving the legal title and control to a trustee for a time which might continue during the whole life of the child does not violate the rule against perpetuities, although it may violate some other rule regulating the length of time such a trust can continue; but the latter point is not decided); Pulitzer v. Livingston, 89 Me. 359, 36 A 635 [disappr Slade v. Patten, 68 Me. 380] (holding that a trust created by the owners of property for their own benefit, to continue indefinitely, did not violate the rule against perpetuities, both legal and equitable estates being vested, and the rule concerning itself only with the commencement, and not the termination, of estates; and suggesting that those decisions to the effect that such a trust must terminate within twenty-one years after lives in being are the result of confusing the rule against perpetuities with the rules disallowing restraints on alienation; but apparently putting the decision on the ground that the trust by its terms was destructible by each cestui as to his share and therefore did not create a perpetuity, which by definition is an indestructible interest). Compare In re Johnston, 185 Pa. 179, 188, 39 A 879, 84 AmSR 621 (where it was said, obiter, that a devise or property to trustees for a period of seventy-five years is not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities where the equitable estate vested immediately at the testator's death; but the limitation was held void, along with the ultimate limitation in remainder at the end of the term, on the ground that "the testator's chief and controlling purpose throughout was to tie up his estate, and hold it intact beyond the power of either children or grandchildren to interfere with the final distribution he proposed at the end of seventy-five years"). And see cases supra note 17.

"The courts drifted naturally into fixing the limit of time during which the trusteeship of an absolute and indefeasible interest might be required to continue at lives in being and twenty one years after the creation of the interests. They not infrequently called it an application of the rule against perpetuities." Kales Future Interests § 658.

reinvest.[28] Thus a limitation of property to trustees, to be held by them indefinitely or for such a length of time that beneficial interests may vest at a time beyond the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities, for the benefit of the heirs or descendants of the donor or another,[29] or such of them as may be or become destitute or in need of pecuniary assistance,[30] or for any other wholly or partially noncharitable purpose,[31] or, in the case of a trusteeship which by its terms will or may endure beyond the period specified by the rule, a limitation to trustees of property to be distributed to cestuis and to vest in them only upon its termination,[32] is void, not on account of the time for which the trusteeship may continue, but because interests or estates covered by it may vest at a time beyond the prescribed period.[33]

Discretionary powers of distribution. When by its terms a trust is to continue only for a period reasonably less than twenty-one years,[34] or only during the lives of persons in being at its creation,[35] a provision for the distribution of the trust property at the termination of the trust is not made too remote by reposing a discretion in the trustees as to the time of making it, inasmuch as they can be compelled to distribute within a reasonable time.[36] And it has been held that, where property is limited over to trustees

(2) A limitation of property to a testator's great-grandchildren, to take effect at the expiration of a trust which is to continue until the death of the last survivor of all the testator's grandchildren, whether born or unborn at his death, is void for remoteness inasmuch as the trust may not cease and the interests of the great-grandchildren vest within twenty-one years after lives in being when the will took effect. [a] Thus, when a fund was given to trustees to accumulate the income for a period of ten years or more, at their discretion, and then to be used for a designated charitable purpose, the provision for accumulation was held good over the objection that it contravened the rule against perpetuities, inasmuch as the trustees may, in their discretion, apply the fund to the designated purpose at any time after ten years, and, if they refuse to do so within a reasonable time thereafter, they can be compelled to make the application. 35. Brandenburg v. Thorndike, 139 Mass. 102, 28 NE 575; Myer's Est., 11 Pa. Co. 194.

[a] Principle applied.—Where a testator gave property in trust to pay an annuity to his wife, and "at the expiration of three years from the death of my wife, or at such time, whether earlier or later, as may, in the discretion of the trustees, be found expedient and practicable for the final settlement and distribution of my estate," to transfer and pay such property to designated nieces and nephews, the discretion of the trustees to delay the payment after the expiration of the three years is limited to such time as is reasonably necessary to settle the estate, and in case of unreasonable delay they would be compelled by a court of equity to make the payment and transfer; and in no contingency could it be necessary or reasonable to delay the settlement and distribution of the estate for twenty-one years after the death of the widow. Brandenburg v. Thorndike, 139 Mass. 102, 28 NE 575.

36. Rule against perpetuities inapplicable to possession or enjoyment see supra § 16.

upon the termination of a life in being at the creation of the estate, in trust to pay the income to such beneficiary as they shall select from a designated class, the discretion must be exercised within a reasonable time, and the trust is therefore not too remote.[37]

[§ 73] (2) Effect of Remoteness. Ordinarily a trust under which interests or estates may vest at a time too remote is entirely void and will not be given effect even for the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities;[38] but when it provides for separate and distinct payments or transfers at different times, some of which are within and some without the permitted period, the trust is good for the purpose of those payments which are to be made within the period and is void only as to those which are too remote,[39] except when the series of limitations forms such a scheme of distribution that they cannot be separated without defeating the organic plan of the trust.[40]

Independent trusts. When a trust for one person or class is void for remoteness, an otherwise valid trust separately created by the same instrument for other purposes or beneficiaries will not thereby be rendered void unless it is so intimately connected with the failing scheme as to fail with it.[41]

[§ 74] 2. Particular Trusts[42]—a. Trusts To Sell. So far as they concern questions of remoteness, trusts to sell are governed by the same principles as are powers to sell,[43] which have been considered elsewhere in this treatise.[44]

[§ 75] b. Trusts To Pay Debts or Legacies.[45] When property is given to trustees, in trust to raise money therefrom for the payment of debts or legacies, and then to transfer or convey the property to a designated person, the beneficial interest of such person is not postponed until the execution of the trust, but vests at once, subject to such payments, and consequently is not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities.[46]

[§ 76] c. Trusts for Maintenance of Property and Similar Uses.[47] In a number of cases, trusts of indefinite duration for the maintenance or repair of private property not devoted to charitable uses,[48] or the care and preservation of a grave or monument,[49] or for other similar noncharitable purposes

37. New Haven Young Men's Inst. v. New Haven, 60 Conn. 32, 22 A 447.

[a] Thus, where a testator gave property to his wife and daughter for their lives, and upon the death of the survivors to the city of New Haven in trust to apply the income for the purchase of books for any public library which might from time to time exist in that city, "the city must of course forthwith commence to administer the trust by selecting the beneficiary and by the purchase of books for the library selected," and the trust is therefore not open to the objection that a selection may be made so as to vest the equitable estate after the period prescribed by the statute against perpetuities. [a] Thus, where a testator gave all his property except one parcel in trust for his children, and that parcel was in trust to pay the income to a niece, with a provision that the trustee should make such income up to a specified sum from the property in the general trust, the fact that the general trust was void for remoteness did not render the trust for the niece also void. "There is . . . no substantial difference, for the purpose of the rule against perpetuities, between a trust for sale and a power of sale, where the sale is intended to be completed by a conveyance to the purchaser of the legal estate vested in the trustees. A testator or settlor cannot (as I think) impose an obligation to sell where he cannot lawfully confer a power to do so; or escape from the rule against perpetuities by vesting in his trustees an imperative instead of a discretionary power of sale." not for the benefit of any particular individuals,[50] have been held void as creating perpetuities; but it would seem that the term is used in its nontechnical sense of a continuing interest,[51] and that the real ground of the invalidity of such trusts is the want of a cestui.[52] Where statutes declare such trusts charitable or permit them to continue indefinitely,[53] any objection on the ground of remoteness is usually removed;[54] and a trust to pay the income of property to a cemetery company for such period as they shall maintain and keep up certain graves does not infringe the rule against perpetuities.[55]

[§ 77] d. Business Trusts.[56] Trusts in which the trustees are empowered to manage and control the trust property or carry on business, and in which the beneficial interests are represented by certificates, usually rendered transferable by the terms of the trust instrument, do not, it would seem, violate the rule against perpetuities, inasmuch as both the legal title and beneficial interests are vested immediately,[57] although the trust may continue for a period longer than that prescribed by the rule.[58]

[§ 78] B. Charitable Trusts[59]—1. [b] "The statement is often found in the books that the law against perpetuities does not apply to public charities. But the statement is misleading. It is undoubtedly true that the principle of public policy, which declares that estates shall not be indefinitely inalienable in the hands of individuals, is held inapplicable to public charities. . . . But it must be remembered that the rule against perpetuities, in its proper legal sense, has relation only to the time of the vesting of an estate, and in no way affects its continuance after it is once vested. The perpetual duration of a charitable trust, after it has become vested, is one of its distinctive characteristics. It is the possibility that the estate left in trust for a charitable purpose may not vest or begin within the limits of a life or lives in being and twenty-one years, that offends against the rule of 'perpetuity' or 'remoteness.' In this respect a gift in trust for charity is 'subject to the same rules and principles as any other estate depending for its coming into existence upon a condition precedent. If the condition . . . is so remote and indefinite as to transgress the limits of time prescribed by the rules of law against perpetuities, the gift fails ab initio.'" Brooks v. R. 7 Ch. 232 (where the validity of a gift in trust for a charitable purpose which might not come into being within the proper time was doubted by the lord chancellor, but the point was not decided, it appearing probable that such purpose would arise, the question was reserved). But see Chamberlayne v. Brockett, L. R. 8 Ch. 206, 210 (where it is said: "If there was an immediate gift of the whole residue for charitable uses . . . such gift was valid . . . although the particular application of the fund directed by the will would not of necessity take effect within any assignable limit of time, and could never take effect at all except on the occurrence of events in their nature contingent and uncertain. When personal estate is once effectually given to charity it is taken entirely out of the scope of the law of remoteness"). To same effect In re Swain, [1905] 1 Ch. 669, 2 BRC 872.

But see Meadors v. Sherrill, (Tex. Civ. A.) 212 SW 546, 547 (where a gift to trustees to hold until in their judgment it should be proper or necessary for a designated church to have a new building, and then to pay over the fund to such church, was held good as against the objection that the contingency might not happen within the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities, on the ground that the gift took effect in præsenti and the only thing postponed was "the particular form or mode which the donor would have applied to the execution of the charity"); Re Orr, 40 Ont. L. 567, 598, 13 OntWN 154 (where it was said: "Where there is an immediate and effectual gift to charity, no question of remoteness can arise, although the particular object will not necessarily take effect within any assignable limit of time, and may never take effect at all;" but the gift in question was construed to be for the benefit of existing charitable institutions, and it was considered that only the particular form or mode in which the fund was to be applied was uncertain or left to future events).

[a] Thus (1) the gift of a fund to a trustee, in trust to hold and accumulate it until it should equal the amount of the debt at that time owed by the state of Pennsylvania, and then to pay it over to the state treasurer for the purpose of discharging such indebtedness, is void for remoteness, inasmuch as the gift may not become available for the public or charitable use within the period pre-future interest or estate intended for charitable uses under which the title may not vest in the trustee within such period,[66] is void for remoteness, except in the case of an interest or estate limited over to charitable uses upon the expiration or termination of another limitation for charitable uses,[67] and except to some degree in the case of a gift to a charitable corporation to be thereafter formed.[68]

[§ 79] 2. Gifts to Corporations To Be Formed.[69] A gift, effective presently or within the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities,[70] to a corporation not in existence at the date of the gift but to be formed thereafter, of property to be held by it upon charitable trusts is ordinarily not obnoxious to the rule, although the time for the formation of such corporation is not restricted to the period prescribed by the rule, a reasonable time only being contemplated therefor.[71] Cases sometimes cited to scribed by the rule against perpetuities. Girard Trust Co. v. Russell, 179 Fed. 446, 102 CCA 592. (2) A gift of money in trust to be held and invested until a hospital should be established in a designated city, and then to be paid over to such hospital, is void for remoteness, for no such hospital may come into existence within twenty-one years after a life or lives in being. Malmquist v. Detar, 123 Kan. 384, 255 P 42. (3) A gift of real estate to trustees, in trust to hold it until a church of a designated faith and discipline should be organized and should build a church edifice upon the land and until the trustees should be satisfied that the cost of the building had been paid and that the church was free from debt, and then to convey the property to the church, was void for remoteness, as no church might be established or perform the conditions within the period of the rule against perpetuities. Jocelyn v. Nott, 44 Conn. 55. But compare Harges v. Zander, 314 Ill. 170, 145 NE 363 (where a devise of a fund in trust to pay a certain sum to each church of a designated denomination in the city of Chicago which might at the testator's death or thereafter be building a church edifice in such city was held to be not in contravention of the rule against perpetuities, but a gift in præsenti and not upon a condition).

[b] Dicta inconsistent with this statement are found in some cases, in which the courts say in substance that a gift may be made in trust for a charity which is not in existence and the beginning of whose existence is uncertain, or which is to take effect upon a contingency which may not happen within a life or lives in being and twenty-one years thereafter, and still be valid, provided there is no gift of the property in the meantime to or for the benefit of any individual or private corporation; but the point decided in those cases is that a gift to a corporation to be thereafter formed, to be by it held upon charitable trusts, is not too remote because no time limit is fixed within which such corporation must be formed. Russell v. Allen, 107 U. S. 163, 2 SCt 327, 27 L. ed. 397; Franklin v. Hastings, 253 Ill. 46, 97 NE 265, AnnCas 1913A 135; Crerar v. Williams, 145 Ill. 625, 34 NE 467, 21 LRA 454; Matter of Potts, 205 App. Div. 147, 199 NYS 880 [aff 236 N. Y. 658 mem, 142 NE 323 mem]. See In re John, 30 Or. 494, 47 P 341, 50 P 226, 36 LRA 242 (where the dictum is stated, without any relation to the point decided). Compare Girard Trust Co. v. Russell, 179 Fed. 446, 453, 102 CCA 592 (where it was said: "It is urged . . . that the rule against perpetuities or remoteness is applicable to gifts to charity only where there is a prior gift or a 'first taker,' whose estate may continue for a period beyond the time limited by the rule against perpetuities or remoteness. As there is no 'first taker' in the case now in hand, it is said that the rule mentioned does not defeat the gift. The argument ignores the fact that . . . there is no gift, either to charity or to any other party, except upon a condition which contravenes the rule. If by the agreement there had been expressed an intention to make an absolute immediate gift to charity, we should have a very different case before us. There are many cases in the books where immediate gifts to charity have been sustained, although they have been made payable to corporations not formed when the gifts to charity took effect. So there are many cases where immediate gifts to charity have been sustained, notwithstanding illegal directions concerning the manner of administering the charity. But these cases are not in point"); Easton v. Hall, 323 Ill. 397, 154 NE 216 (holding that the principle stated in such dicta does not save a gift over to charities on a remote contingency after a gift to an individual for being void for remoteness).

[c] Gifts to charity on "condition precedent."—(1) On account of the anomalous nature of a "charitable trust" and the ambiguity of the phrase, some confusion has arisen in regard to dispositions of property to be devoted to charitable uses upon the happening of a certain event or the performance of a condition, especially when property is to individual trustees in trust to pay it over to a charitable organization or institution upon such an event or condition. Such a gift is sometimes discussed as if it involved a postponement of vesting, and so as clearly subject to the rule against perpetuities. Gray Perp. § 605. (2) By other authorities, however, the gift is treated as vested in the trustee, but upon a charitable use which is apparently regarded as an entity analogous to a beneficial interest under a private trust, and consequently void for remoteness if the happening of the event or the performance of the condition upon which payment over is to be made may occur beyond the limits prescribed by the rule. Jocelyn v. Nott, 44 Conn. 55. See also Gray Perp. § 596. (3) That the latter is the correct view of the question is indicated by the cases in which property is given to a charitable organization or institution to be applied to charitable uses which may arise in the future. In such cases there is clearly no postponement of vesting, and the question of remoteness can arise only as to the charitable use or beneficial interest. Thus, where property was given to a church to be used for the poor of its congregation who might be in need of assistance, the validity of the gift was attacked on the ground that no persons of the class designated were shown to be in existence or would necessarily become so within the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities; but the court took judicial notice of "the certainty that the poor will always be among men" and held that "the law cannot determine that a charity which must go into operation as soon as there shall be a person in the parish needing pecuniary assistance in obtaining such food, clothing, fire and shelter as, according to the general understanding, are necessary, is so long postponed as to offend the law against perpetuities;" thus indicating that if the charitable use had been one which might not have arisen within the prescribed period the trust would have been bad. Compare Literary Fund v. Dawson, 10 Leigh (37 Va.) 147 (where a will was construed to bequeath money to the Literary Fund of the state, an existing corporation which had no authority to take such bequest, provided a legislative act should be obtained giving it such authority; and a bill to declare such will void was dismissed, without prejudice to the rights of the parties in the event of the failure to procure the necessary legislative acts).

the contrary will be found to involve gifts to unincorporated voluntary associations,[72] or gifts to nonexistent donees,[73] without any indication of intention that a corporation be formed, and it would seem that the invalidity of such gifts arises out of the nonexistence of the donees or their incapacity to take and not from any question of remoteness.[74]

[§ 80] C. Trusts for Accumulation[75]—1. In General. No gift of money or property subject, as a condition precedent, to the accumulation of the interest or income therefrom is bad for remoteness if the period for which such accumulation is directed to continue after the creation of the gift does not exceed that prescribed by the rule against perpetuities;[76] and although the time for which accumulation may continue may be restricted by statute to a lesser period,[77] violation of such a statute will not affect the validity of the principal gift.[78] But if the length of time for which the accumulation is to continue may or will exceed the period of the rule, the gift is void for remoteness and the trust to accumulate fails with it ab initio,[79] and the property of which the income is directed to be accumulated passes to the person or persons who would have been entitled thereto had the gift and the direction to accumulate both been omitted from the instrument containing them.[80] A few cases apparently assume that the rule against perpetuities limits the period for which accumulations may be directed to continue even where the property out of which the income

[a] The theory on which "an executory gift to a charity, without a precedent gift to private persons, upon the organization of a corporation to execute the charity, is held valid . . . . [is] that the general charitable purpose of the donor being immediate, a court of equity, having the power from the beginning to execute the charity in its own way, notwithstanding the fact that the donor's method may cause delay, will regard the gift as immediate, involving neither postponement nor suspension. This theory explains why a similar gift made to follow a gift to private persons is held to be invalid. In that case the existence of an intent to make an immediate gift is conclusively denied by the act of the donor in interposing a prior gift." Matter of Potts, 205 App. Div. 147, 152, 199 NYS 880 [aff 236 N. Y. 658 mem, 142 NE 323 mem].

[b] In Maryland (1) it is provided by L. (1888) c 249 that no devise or bequest of property for charitable use shall be held void by reason of any uncertainty as to the donees where the will contains a direction for the formation of a corporation to take the gift, and where within twelve months from the probate of the will or from the expiration of intervening life estates, if any, a corporation shall be formed in accordance with such directions capable and willing to receive such devise or bequest; but it has been said that "it is perfectly clear that it was the purpose of the Legislature in passing this Act to abolish under certain conditions the rule as to uncertainty, in obedience to which so many devises to charitable uses have been stricken down by the Courts." Chase v. Stockett, 72 Md. 235, 239, 19 A 761. (2) Under this statute, a devise of real estate to trustees in trust to establish a home for destitute, aged, and infirm women, with a provision that the trustees might if they deemed it best become a body corporate, either under the general laws or a special charter, is good, although except for the statute it would have been void for "uncertainty as to the beneficiaries." Chase v. Stockett, supra.

[c] Immediacy of gift.—In the estimation of a court of equity the gift of an estate to a corporation to be thereafter formed is immediate. Matter of Potts, 205 App. Div. 147, 199 NYS 880 [aff 236 N. Y. 658 mem, 142 NE 323 mem].

[d] Period for which incorporation may be delayed.—(1) A church organized and incorporated seven years after a gift of property to be held by such a church, when organized, for its general purposes, has the right to take and hold the property and be the recipient of the charitable gift. Miller v. Chittenden, 2 Iowa 315, 4 Iowa 252. (2) A corporation formed to take and hold a gift for charitable uses which failed to complete its incorporation until eleven years after the date of the gift is entitled to acquire the gift, where no forfeiture was imposed by the donor in the event of nonincorporation within the time specified by him. Jr. 127, 132, 32 Reprint 550 (where it was said that, prior to the passage of the Thellusson Act, "it was quite a settled notion . . . that you might by executory devise prevent an estate vesting for life or lives in being and 21 years, with that small addition at the end of the life . . . [the period of gestation] and it was always conceived, that for the period during which you could prevent the estate vesting, you might direct the rents and profits to accumulate"). March, 139 Tenn. 496, 202 SW 73 (all apparently applying the principle stated in the text).

[a] The leading case is that of Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. Jr. 227, 31 Reprint 117 [aff 11 Ves. Jr. 112, 32 Reprint 1030, 1 ERC 498], in which a testator gave a large fortune in trust to accumulate until all of his sons and grandsons and grandsons' children who were living or en ventre sa mère at his death were dead, and then to be paid over; and while the case was argued elaborately and at great length the court was unanimous in sustaining the validity of the gift over. On account of the ingenuity with which the testator took advantage of the rule against perpetuities and the large amount of money included in the trust, which, it was estimated, would probably amount to more than £100,000,000 at the time for distribution, the case aroused great public interest, and the examination of the matters of policy involved in such a disposition of property resulted thereafter in the passage of St. 39 & 40 Geo. III c 98, governing the period and purposes for which trusts for accumulations may be created, which is accordingly commonly known as the Thellusson Act. Some modification of the Thellusson will was subsequently made by a private act of Parliament (3 & 4 Wm. IV No. 27).

See Howe v. Hodge, 152 Ill. 252, 38 NE 1083 (dictum).

"The gift of the accumulated fund is, as has been said, void; the direction to accumulate is also to be disregarded, and this can be done on either of two theories. It may be said that the trust to accumulate exists only for the sake of the gift of the accumulateed fund, and as the gift is void, the trust to accumulate fails also; or the trust to accumulate may be regarded as still existing, but as, subject to this trust, the property is in the heir or next of kin or residuary devisee or legatee, this latter can at once put an end to the trust." Gray Perp. § 671.

80. Rogers' Est., 18 Phila. (Pa.) 99.

Devolution of income when trust arises is vested;[81] but the rule does not so apply,[82] and aside from the question of its invalidity as a restraint upon alienation,[83] any restriction upon the length of the period for which accumulation may be directed in such case is purely statutory.[84]

Gift for charitable uses.[85] Upon the principle hereinabove stated,[86] a gift for charitable uses which is to vest only upon the termination of a trust for accumulation is void for remoteness if the period for accumulation may possibly exceed that prescribed by the rule against perpetuities,[87] but, in the absence of statute, the gift is valid if such period cannot be exceeded;[88] and where a charitable gift is vested, directions to accumulate the income are not within the rule against perpetuities,[89] although they may be objectionable as restraints upon the use or enjoyment of the property,[90] and in some jurisdictions it has been held that the accumulation may be stopped by the courts of equity in a proper case under their general regulatory powers.[91]

[§ 81] 2. Statutory Restrictions—a. The Thellusson Act and Subsequent Enactments. The first statutory restriction upon trusts for accumulation was made by the English statute sometimes known as Lord Loughborough's Act or, more commonly, as the Thellusson Act,[92] which was followed by the statute called the Accumulations Act.[93] These statutes have since been superseded, as to England and for accumulation violates restrictive statutes see infra § 85.

82. Goldtree v. Thompson, 79 Cal. 613, 22 P 50; cases infra this note; and note 84.

[a] Accumulation to pay debts or legacies.—(1) When property is directed to be accumulated to pay the donor's debts or to pay legacies to persons in being and ascertainable, the creditors or legatees can stop the accumulation, and it is not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities. Morgan v. Morgan, 20 R. I. 600, 40 A 736; Williams v. Herrick, 19 R. I. 197, 32 A 913; Williams v. Lewis, 6 H. L. Cas. 1013, 10 Reprint 1594; Southampton v. Hertford, 2 Ves. & B. 54, 35 Reprint 239, 1 ERC 514. (2) But an accumulation to pay the debts of another is void if it may continue beyond the period of the rule against perpetuities, the reason seemingly being that it is for the benefit of such debtor rather than of his creditors, and neither being entitled to the corpus of the fund until the end of the period for accumulation, the trust for accumulation is not destructible. Girard Trust Co. v. Russell, 179 Fed. 446, 102 CCA 592; Canda v. Canda, (Ch.) 113 A 503 [aff 92 N. J. Eq. 423, 112 A 727, 13 ALR 1029].

The prohibition of accumulations longer than the minority of the takers of the interest was made to prevent an unfeeling and selfish testator from so devising his estate as to make persons rich in the distant future, to the detriment of those during the period of limitation who had better claims on his bounty. The latter had to live in poverty in order that their children or grandchildren might be made rich at a distant future day").

[a] Gift vesting when fund and accumulations reach specified amount.—Where a settlor deposited money in trust, to be accumulated until it equalled the debt at that time owed by the state of Pennsylvania, and then to be paid over to such state for the purpose of discharging its debt, inasmuch as the state took no present interest in the fund but was to receive it only on a contingency which might never happen, or which might happen at a time beyond that limited by the rule against perpetuities, the trust was void ab initio. These periods are alternative, and only one may be chosen; two or more of them cannot be made consecutive periods for accumulation. Any shorter period may be chosen." 22 Halsbury L. Eng. p 370.

Wales,[94] by similar provisions of the Law of Property Act of 1925.[95] The Thellusson Act has been declared by statute to be in force in Ontario,[96] although the contrary had previously been held,[97] and in Scotland,[98] but in the latter jurisdiction it no longer obtains,[99] and in Ireland it has been held not to apply.[1]

[§ 82] b. Other Statutory Restrictions—(1) In General. In the United States statutes have been enacted in a number of jurisdictions restricting the persons for whose benefit a trust for accumulation may be created, or the length of time for which it may be directed to continue.[2] Most of such statutes are founded upon the Thellusson Act and embody

[a] In Alabama (1) no trust of estate for the purpose of accumulation only can have any force or effect for a longer term than ten years, unless when for the benefit of a minor in being at the date of conveyance, or if by will at the death of the testator, in which case the trust may extend to the termination of such minority. Code (1907) § 3410. (2) This statute is sui generis, and relates only to trusts for "accumulation merely;" consequently the fact that in executing a trust there may be an incidental accumulation will not bring it within the statute. Henderson v. Henderson, 210 Ala. 73, 97 S 353.

[b] In California (1) an accumulation of the income of property, if directed to commence on the creation of the interest out of which the income is to arise, must be made for the benefit of one or more minors then in being, and terminate at the expiration of their minority; and if directed to commence at any time subsequent to the creation of the interest out of which the income is to arise, it shall commence within the time permitted for the vesting of future interests, and during the minority of the beneficiaries, and terminate at the expiration of such minority. All directions for the accumulation of the income of property except those above allowed are void. Civ. Code (1923) §§ 723, 724. (2) Particular trusts for accumulation have been held to comply with the statute in the following cases: In re Budd, 166 Cal. 286, 135 P 1131; Hornung v. Sedgwick, 164 Cal. 629, 130 P 212. (3) For other cases construing these provisions see infra notes 3-7; and §§ 83-87 passim.

[c] In Illinois (1) no real or personal property may be so settled or disposed of that the rents, issues, profits or produce thereof shall be wholly or partially accumulated for any longer term than the life or lives of any such grantor or grantors, settlor or settlors, or for any longer than the term of twenty-one years from the death of any such grantor, settlor, devisor, or testator; or for any longer than during the minority or respective minorities of any person or persons who shall be living, or en ventre sa mère at the time of the death of such grantor, devisor, or testator, or for any longer than during the minority or respective minorities only of any person or persons who, under the uses of trusts of the deed, will, or other assurances directing such accumulations, would, for the time being, if of full age, be entitled unto the rents, issues, and profits, or the interest, dividends, or annual produce so directed to be accumulated. L. (1907) p 1. (2) For cases construing these provisions see infra notes 3-7; and §§ 83-87 passim.

[d] In Indiana (1) a provision for the accumulation or interest of money or other personal property is void, except if the accumulation be directed to commence from the date of the instrument or the death of the person executing it, it may be for the benefit of the minors then in being or in being at such death, and to terminate at the expiration of their minority; or if it be directed to commence at any period subsequent to the death of the person executing such period, it may be within the time allowed for the suspension of ownership of personal property, and at some time during the minority of the persons for whose benefit it is intended, and must terminate at the expiration of their minority. Burns St. Annot. (1914) § 9724. (2) A direction to accumulate until the beneficiaries respectively attain full age is not violative of the statute. Dyson v. Repp, 29 Ind. 482. (3) For other cases construing these provisions see infra notes 3-7; and §§ 83-87 passim.

[e] In Michigan (1) an accumulation of rents and profits of real estate, if directed to commence on the creation of the estate out of which the rents and profits are to arise, must be made for the benefit of one or more minors then in being, and terminate at the expiration of their minority; and if directed to commence at any time subsequent to the creation of the estate out of which the rents and profits are to arise, it shall commence within the time permitted for the vesting of future estates, and during the minority of the persons for whose benefit it is directed, and shall terminate at the expiration of such minority. All directions for the accumulation of rents and profits of real estate except those above allowed are void. Comp. L. (1915) §§ 11555, 11556. (2) For cases construing these provisions see infra notes 3-7; and §§ 83-87 passim.

[f] In Minnesota (1) the statutory provisions relating to accumulation are similar to those of Michigan. Gen. St. (1923) §§ 8067, 8068. (2) The provisions of such statute are wholly inapplicable to trusts for the accumulation of personal property, which are governed by the rules of the common law. Congdon v. Congdon, 160 Minn. 343, 200 NW 76. (3) For other cases construing these provisions see infra notes 3-7; and §§ 83-87 passim.

[g] In Montana.—Civ. Code (1907) § 4468, 4469 (similar to California statute).

[h] In New York (1) all directions for the accumulation of rents and profits of real property are void, except that such an accumulation may be directed as follows: if it be directed to commence on the creation of the estate out of which the rents and profits are to arise, it must be made for the benefit of one or more minors then in being, and terminate at or before the expiration of their minority; if it be directed to commence at any time subsequent to the estate out of which the rents and profits are to arise, it must commence within the time permitted for the vesting of future estates, and during the minority of the beneficiaries, and shall terminate at or before the expiration of such minority. Real Prop. L. § 61. (2) An accumulation of the income of personal property is valid, if directed to commence from the date of the instrument or the death of the person executing it, and to be made for the benefit of one or more minors then in being or in being at such death, and to terminate at or before the expiration of their minority; or if directed to commence at any period subsequent to the date of the instrument or subsequent to the death of the person executing it, and directed to commence within the time allowed for the suspension of the absolute ownership of personal property, and at some time during the minority of the persons for whose benefit it is intended, and to terminate at or before the expiration of their minority. All other directions for the accumulation of the income of personal property are void. Personal Prop. L. § 16. (3) The time within which an accumulation may be directed to commence differs according to whether the property out of which the income is to arise is real or personal, the statute having been construed to permit an accumulation of the rents and profits of realty to commence at the expiration of two lives in being when the accumulation is directed, but an accumulation of the income of personalty to commence only at some time during the continuance and before the expiration of two lives in being. Manice v. Manice, 43 N. Y. 303. See Mason v. Mason, 2 Sandf. Ch. 432, 475 [aff 2 Barb. 229] ("The accumulation may be postponed in its inception to any point of time within the compass of two lives in being, and then may continue till the end of the minority of the beneficiary"). (4) Particular provisions have been held not to direct unlawful accumulations in the following cases: Roe v. Vingut, 117 N. Y. 204, 22 NE 933; Horton v. Cantwell, 108 N. Y. 255, 15 NE 546; Matter of Raymond, 73 App. Div. 11, 76 NYS 355; Duncklee v. Butler, 38 App. Div. 99, 56 NYS 491; Arthur v. Arthur, 3 App. Div. 375, 38 NYS 1002; Morgan v. (5) For other cases construing these provisions see infra notes 3-7; and §§ 83-87 passim.

[i] In Pennsylvania (1) no real or personal property may be so settled or disposed of that the rents, issues, or profits thereof shall be wholly or partially accumulated for any longer term than the life or lives of the grantor or grantors, settlor or settlors, or testator, and the term of twenty-one years from the death of any such grantor, settlor, or testator, that is to say, only after such decease during the minority or respective minorities, with allowance for the period of gestation, of any person or persons who under the uses or trusts of the deed, will, or other assurance directing one or more of its provisions.[3] By them, it has been said, it was intended, not merely to restrict the term of accumulation previously permitted, but to uproot the entire doctrine of accumulation, with the exception or exceptions specifically permitted;[4] and accordingly they apply no less where the accumulation results by indirection or implication than where it is expressly ordered.[5] Whether or not a provision for accumulation is within the statute must be determined as of the time the instrument containing it takes effect.[6] It has been held that such a statute is controlling over a general statute permitting trusts for the beneficial interest of any person to continue for a longer period.[7]

[§ 83] (2) Particular Provisions. When a statute prohibits an accumulation except during the minority of the beneficiary,[8] a direction to accumulate offends if by its terms the accumulation is to begin before the birth of the person for whose benefit it is to be made,[9] or if it is to continue indefinitely,[10] or for the lifetime[11] or until the mar-such accumulation, would for the time being, if of full age, be entitled unto the rents, issues, interests, and profits so directed to accumulate. St. (1920) § 1886S. (2) It seems that a provision for accumulation during a succession of minorities would be invalid, except, perhaps, for a period of twenty-one years after the creation of the estate. Furness' Est., 16 Phila. 357, 14 WklyNC 391. (3) For other cases construing these provisions see infra notes 3-7; and §§ 83-87 passim.

[j] In Wisconsin (1) an accumulation of rents and profits of real estate may be directed for the benefit of one or more persons as follows: if it be directed to commence on the creation of the estate out of which the rents and profits are to arise, it must be made for the benefit of one or more minors then in being and terminate at the expiration of their minority; if it be directed to commence at any time subsequent to the creation of the estate out of which the rents and profits are to arise, it shall commence within the time permitted for the vesting of future estates and during the minority of the person for whose benefit it is directed, and shall terminate at the expiration of such minority; and it may be directed for the sole benefit of a literary or charitable corporation which shall have been organized under the laws of the state, but must terminate upon the expiration of twenty-one years from the time when it shall be directed to commence. All directions for the accumulations of rents and profits of real estate, except such as are above allowed, shall be void. St. (1921) §§ 2061, 2062. (2) There is no legal objection to accumulation of the income of personal estate for other purposes. In re Stark, 149 Wis. 631, 134 NW 389; Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 529, 24 NW 161, 25 NW 18. "The origin of this limitation is traceable to the will of an English merchant who died in 1797. This will devised property worth about $3,000,000 to trustees, to accumulate the income during the lives of all his sons, grandsons and grandson's children living at his death, and then, at the death of the survivor, to transfer the property to the three living, oldest, male descendants of his three sons, and failing them to the Crown of England for the sinking fund. It was then estimated that the trust might last for 75 years and with most skillful management, the total accumulation could reach $125,000,000. It was held, however, that the trust did not conflict with the then existing rule against perpetuities. Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. 227, 31 Reprint 117. The danger to public interests of such possible accumulations caused Parliament to promptly enact the law of 39 and 40 Geo. III, Ch. 98, popularly called the Thellusson Act, and our statute (§ 9724 Burns 1914) is the outgrowth of that legislation." Porter v. Compare Matter of Ziegler, 82 Misc. 10, 143 NYS 682, 11 Mills Surr. 15 (where a trust to accumulate during the minority of testator's son, and then to pay him the net income but not to pay the corpus and accumulations until he should reach the age of twenty-five, with remainder to adults in case he should die before receiving the corpus, was held void as to that portion which directed retention of the accumulations after the minority of the beneficiary and their payment to adults); Penniman v. Howard, 71 Misc. 598, 128 NYS 910 (where it does not appear whether or not the life tenant was a minor). Contra Eldred v. Shaw, 112 Mich. 237, 70 NW 545.

"The argument that the words of the statute are satisfied by a limitation to the minor of the use of the accumulated fund, after his majority, for life, with remainder over, or, in other words, that it is not necessary that the accumulation should be for the sole benefit of the minor, if allowed to prevail would introduce great uncertainty and confusion. Under that construction the benefit of the infant might be the mere pretext and not the real reason for accumulation. . . . The principle which would sustain a limitation of the use of the accumulated fund to the minor after majority, for life, as an accumulation for his benefit, would sustain such a limitation for a term of years only. The accumulation in either case might be almost wholly for the benefit of the remainderman, depending upon the duration of the life of the person to whom the use was given after majority, or the term of years upon which the use was limited. It would be an equally uncertain rule to make the validity of the direction for accumulation depend on the consideration whether the minor's benefit was the primary object of the limitation, and the benefit of the remainderman only incidental and secondary. We are satisfied that the policy and language of the statute require, in order to sustain a direction for accumulation . . . that the accumulation must be for the sole benefit of the minor, and that this can only be true where the accumulated fund is given over to him absolutely when the period of accumulation ceases." Pray v. Hegeman, 92 N. Y. 508, 516.

[a] Thus, where a fund is limited to a minor for life with remainder over, and accumulation is directed until the minor becomes of age, the direction for accumulation is void under the statute, inasmuch as it is not for the sole benefit of the minor. "We are satisfied that the policy and language of the statute require . . . that the accumulation must be for the sole benefit of the minor, and that this can only be true where the accumulated fund is given over to him absolutely when the period of accumulation ceases." [a] Reason for exception.—Since the statute relating to suspension of the power of alienation of real property permits it to be made inalienable during two lives in being and during the minority of the first remainderman, by means of a contingent remainder over, a direction to accumulate for a minor during his minority, with a limitation over in case of his death before attaining full age, cannot cause any suspension of the power of alienation for a greater period of time than that permitted, and the minor during his minority has a vested, not a contingent, estate, although it is subject to be defeated by the condition subsequent of his dying under age; but in the case of personal property suspension of absolute ownership is permitted only for the duration of two lives in being, and therefore the reason does not apply. Co. 66 (holding that, where there are not sufficient assets in a testator's estate to pay pecuniary legacies, the income from a fund directed to be accumulated for a purpose void under the statute should be applied to the payment of the pecuniary legacies rather than go to the residuary legatees).

"The general rule with regard to accumulations liberated by the statute is thus expressed: Where the trust for accumulation is grafted upon an estate where vesting is deferred or made contingent until after the period of accumulation, the statute by stopping the accumulation does not hasten the vesting or possession, and the income goes to the residuary legatee, or if the gift is of the residuary estate to the next of kin, or heir, according as it is personal or real estate, until the vesting or possesion of the estate is matured. . . . But where there is a present gift in possession, and the direction for accumulation is merely to govern the mode of enjoyment, the result is to give to those entitled the present income—under the provision of the act that it 'shall go to and be received by such person or persons as would have been entitled if such accumulation had not been directed'—as if the direction had not been given. . . . And where there is a present gift for life with limitation over, the released accumulations go to the tenant for life during the continuance of his estate." Myer's Est., 18 Phila. (Pa.) 103.

[a] Thus (1) where a testator gave an absolute interest to his married daughter, and afterward superadded a direction to accumulate the income during the life of her husband for the benefit of herself and her children, the direction to accumulate becoming void at the end of twenty-one years after the testator's death, the daughter was entitled absolutely to the income for the balance of the lifetime of her husband. Coombe v. Hughes, 34 Beav. 127, 55 Reprint 532 [aff 2 De G. J. & S. 657, 67 EngCh 513, 46 Reprint 531]. (2) If a will creates a valid trust of property, and a codicil modifies this trust by provisions involving an illegal accumulation, the fund is to be held on the trusts of the will. Sharp's Est., 155 Pa. 289, 26 A 441; Lutz's Est., 9 Pa. Co. 294.

[b] Although the property is vested, if the right to possession is postponed until the termination of a trust for accumulation which is void under the statute, the owners of the property do not necessarily have the right to the income during the period for which accumulation

tates are not accelerated.[48]

[§ 86] (5) Accumulation for Charitable Purposes. A trust to accumulate for charitable purposes is usually excepted by the express terms of a restrictive statute from its provisions,[49] and when so excepted is not void thereunder;[50] but it is not thereby relieved from the operation of the rule against perpetuities.[51] Where no such exception is made by a statute permitting accumulation only for minors, an accumulation for charitable purposes is invalid,[52] and it is not saved by the provisions of a general statute that charitable gifts are not to be deemed invalid because of uncertainty of the beneficiaries.[53]

A present gift to a charitable corporation to be formed[54] is not, however, rendered invalid by a direction to accumulate the income until the incorporation shall be perfected,[55] for the gift to the corporation is immediate as to income as well as principal,[56] and the direction to accumulate is therefore unnecessary and may be disregarded.[57]

[§ 87] (6) Retroactive Effect.[58] When a statute restricting accumulation applies by its express terms to trusts therefor created by instruments executed after it becomes effective, it does not apply to those created by instruments theretofore executed;[59] hence, when a will directing accumulation is executed before such statute takes effect, it is not governed thereby, although the testator dies after the statute becomes effective.[60] In general, however, such a statute applies to a will made before its passage but coming into effect thereafter.[61]

[§ 88] D. Executory Trusts.[62] By a principle analogous to that governing powers,[63] an executory trust is invalid unless its execution must take place, if at all, within the period after its creation prescribed by the rule against perpetuities;[64] but if it must be executed, if ever, within such period, it is good so far as it can, according to its terms, be executed in favor of objects not too remote from the date of its creation.[65]

IX. CONSTRUCTION OF LIMITATIONS

[§ 89] A. In General.[66] The rule against perpetuities, being a restriction upon the jus disponendi of property,[67] is a rule of law and not one of construction.[68] Accordingly, the provisions of an instrument creating or transferring an interest or estate in property are to be construed in accordance with the usual principles of construction,[69] as if the rule against perpetuities did not exist,[70] except only was directed, since it goes to, and is receivable by, such person or persons as would have been entitled thereto if accumulation had not been directed. In re Billings, 268 Pa. 71, 110 A 768.

Compare Singhi v. Dean, 119 Me. 287, 289, 110 A 865 (where it was said: "Since its purpose, if applicable at all, is to defeat the intention of the testator, it may not be surprising that the courts in their desire to carry out the intent of a testator have in some instances failed to apply this Rule [against perpetuities] in all its rigor or have adopted constructions to avoid its application").

"We should not . . . assume that . . . [a testator] intended to violate a settled rule of law, and thus by the will itself frustrate his own declared intention; but, if the language which he used, upon its face, shows such an intention, it would, of course, be our duty to apply the rule 'remorselessly' . . . without regard to the consequences." [a] "Undoubtedly the correct rule of application is laid down in Andrews v. Lincoln, 95 Me. 541, 544, 50 A 898, 899, 56 LRA 103, adopting language of perhaps the highest authority on the subject, Gray on Perpetuities, 2nd Ed. Sec. 629: 'The Rule against Perpetuities is not a rule of construction, but a peremptory command of law. It is not, like a rule of construction, a test more or less artificial, to determine intention. Its object is to defeat intention. Therefore every provision in a will or settlement is to be construed as if the Rule did not exist, and then to the provision so construed the Rule is to be remorselessly applied.'" Singhi v. intention rather than one which defeats it.[76] But if the meaning is clear, it must be adopted even if the rule renders the gift so construed illegal,[77] and a forced or unnatural construction may not be made in order to avoid the application of the rule.[78]

[§ 91] C. Doctrine of Cy Pres.[79] Although it is a general principle that the construction of an instrument creating or transferring an interest or estate in property is to be made without reference to the rule against perpetuities,[80] certain qualifications thereof have become established in some cases of devises of real estate, under what is known as the doctrine of cy pres.[81] Thus, where a legal or equitable estate in realty is devised to an unborn person for life, with remainder to his children in tail, or to his sons in tail male, either successively or as tenants in common with cross remainders, the unborn person is held to take, in the first case, an estate tail, and, in the second case, an estate tail male,[82] for, if the devise was otherwise construed, the remainders would be too remote.[83] Similarly, where successive life estates in realty are devised to one and his issue forever, with cross remainders, the first generation of life tenants who were unborn at the creation of the estate take an estate tail by cy pres.[84] But the doctrine cannot be applied where the effect of so doing would be to make the estate devolve in a line of succession different from that which the testator has expressly designated,[85] either by the exclusion of persons to whom an interest is attempted to be devised,[86] or by the inclusion of others;[87] for a like reason, it is inapplicable to interests in personalty,[88] and it would seem that it cannot be applied in those jurisdictions in which an estate tail is converted by statute into an estate in fee.[89] The doctrine is applied only to limitations made by will and not to those made by deed;[90] and the courts incline against any extension of it.[91]

X. STATUTORY PROVISIONS[92]

[§ 92] A. Introductory Statement. In a number of jurisdictions statutes exist relative to the creation or limitation of future estates, which may be declaratory of, additional to, or substitutionary for, the rule against perpetuities at common law; and such statutes must be separately consulted as to each jurisdiction.[93] In so far as the construction and application of such statutes are similar to those of the common-law rule, the decisions under them have already been considered;[94] and, in so far as they diverge therefrom, the decisions construing and applying their provisions are treated in the following sections of this treatise.[95] Generally speaking, statutory additions or substitutions have been in the direction of increased stringency,[96] but it is not clear in every instance whether such provisions supersede the common law or are merely supplementary thereto,[97] and the difficulty is enhanced by the apparent tendency of some courts to be influenced by the common-law rule in their construction and application of statutes which in terms make no reference to remoteness of vesting.[98]

[§ 93] B. Limitations to Grantor's Wife and Children. A statute providing that lands may be conveyed to "the" wife and children, or children only, severally, successively, and jointly, and to the heirs of the body of the survivor, if they come of age, and in default thereof, over,[99] is apparently construed to refer to the wife and children of the grantor in the conveyance.[1] Under such statute, successive remainders to the grantor's children, contingent upon the death of each preceding taker without issue then surviving, with an ultimate remainder in fee, are valid.[2]

[§ 94] C. Limitations to Two Successive Donees with Remainder to Heirs. A statute providing that lands may be conveyed or devised to a succession of donees then living, not exceeding two, and to the heirs of the body of the remainderman, and, in default thereof, to the right heirs of the donor, in fee simple,[3] does not prescribe a formula to which conveyances must adhere,[4] and does not prohibit executory devises,[5] but requires only that the fee must vest within or at the end of the lives of not more than two persons.[6]

Donees. A donee to whom an estate for his life is reserved is not to be counted as one of the two donees permitted by statute,[7] and estates may be limited to two donees in succession, subject to a life estate so reserved, without violating the statute.[8] The devisee of an equitable estate is a donee, within the meaning of the statute,[9] and when a trust is created the persons to be numbered as donees are the beneficiaries, and not the trustee.[10]

Heirs. The word "heirs" as used in the statute means such persons as would inherit under statutes relating thereto;[11] but the heirs of a remainderman[12] or of the donor,[13] when an estate is limited to them, take by purchase and not by descent. A remainder to take effect in default of heirs of a remainderman need not be limited generally to the right heirs of the donor,[14] but may be limited to any designated one or ones of them,[15] whether the remainder be created by deed inter vivos or by will.[16]

Particular limitations. A remainder vesting upon the death of the first donee is not in violation of the statute,[17] nor is a limitation in fee to two persons, with an executory limitation over to one upon the death of the other without issue then surviving, and to the donor's heirs in case of the death of both without issue.[18] A remainder which can vest only at the termination of more than two lives is void;[19] but in some cases it has been held that a limitation for life to two or more persons and the survivor of them is measured by only one life, that of the survivor, within the meaning of the statute.[20] No remainder may be limited upon the deaths of two donees to one not an heir of such donee nor a right heir of the donor.[21]

Personalty. Such statute has no application to personal property.[22]

Relation to rule against perpetuities. Whether this odd and confused statute, as it has been designated,[23] is a substitute for, or only additional to, the common-law rule against perpetuities is uncertain.[24]

[a] "Object of this statute is to specify a time limit beyond which the grantor cannot go, but within which he can exercise unbounded discretion; that the purpose of the statute was to prescribe a limit of time beyond which the vesting of the estate in fee could not be suspended; that the lives of the two donees in being were the measure of time within which the ultimate fee must vest —in other words, that the statute prescribed a limit of time, and not a formula of conveyancing." [§ 95] D. Limitations to Persons in Being and Immediate Issue or Descendants. A statute providing that no estate in lands or tenements shall be given or granted by deed or will to any person or persons but such as are in being or to the immediate issue or descendants of such as are in being at the time of making such deed or will[25] is not an enabling act,[26] but is a limitation upon the jus disponendi,[27] and supersedes the common-law rule against perpetuities.[28] The statute has no reference to time,[29] but is a restriction of the persons who may take,[30] and only avoids limitations to persons other than those included within its terms.[31]

Persons in being. A child en ventré sa mère is in being within the meaning of the statute.[32]

Immediate issue or descendants. "Immediate issue" means only the children of the persons in being;[33] but "immediate descendants" includes remoter lineal and collateral descendants who would take immediately under the statute relating to descents,[34] and a limitation to the living descendants of such of the children of the first donee as have theretofore died is valid.[35] What persons are immediate issue or descendants is to be determined as of the date of vesting and not the time of death of the person in being.[36]

Particular limitations. No limitation to a person in being at its creation offends the statute;[37] and accordingly the limitation of an interest to a living person contingent upon his attainment of a specified age is valid.[38] Where all the members of a class to whom an interest is limited will necessarily be donees permitted by the statute, it is immaterial that the class may open and let in additional members subsequent to the creation of the limitation;[39] and a limitation to a class, some members of which are persons to whom the statute permits interests to be limited, and others are not, is valid as to the former and void only as to the latter.[40]

Time of making a will, within the meaning of the statute, is the time when it takes effect by the death of the testator and not the date of its formal execution.[41]

Applicability of statute. Such a statute applies only to real estate,[42] and has no application to personalty[43] nor to gifts of income from realty.[44]

Charitable trusts are not subject to the statute.[45]

Field, 84 Miss. 646, 665, 37 S 139 (where it was said: "It may . . . be conceded that it would have been wiser if this court had originally construed this statute, as intended, as a substitute for all common-law rules to which its provisions can apply, instead of as merely amendatory of the common law; but for us it must be enough that the long line of contrary decisions has become now crystallized into a rule of property"). Three Lives and Ten Years. A statute providing that conveyances cannot "extend" beyond three lives in being at their date, and ten years thereafter,[46] has been construed as prohibiting suspension of the power of alienation of real estate beyond the period specified,[47] and has also been treated as requiring the vesting of future interests within such period.[48] Thus an attempted suspension of the power of alienation for a greater period than that permitted by statute is void;[49] and a limitation to the children of a living person, as a class, with cross remainders upon the death of any taker under an age greater than ten years,[50] or a limitation to those of such class who may attain a specified age greater than ten years,[51] or who may be living at the end of a period in excess of that prescribed by the statute,[52] is void, inasmuch as the class may include children not in being at the creation of the limitation, who might not attain the age specified within ten years after the death of the parent;[53] but the limitation of an executory interest contingent upon the death without issue of not more than three persons is valid.[54]

Period not measured by lives. If the time of suspension or postponement is not measured by lives, it must not extend beyond ten years.[55] It seems that a fixed term not exceeding ten years is unobjectionable.[56]

Effect of exceeding statutory period. A limitation exceeding the statutory period is void ab initio,[57] and not merely for the excess.[58]

Charitable trusts. Such statute does not prohibit charitable trusts.[59]

[§ 97] F. Statutory System Governing Suspension of Alienability or Ownership and Postponements of Vesting; New York and Similar Statutes[60]—1. In General. At a time when the rule against perpetuities was regarded as requiring only the alienability of interests within or at the end of the period by it prescribed,[61] a statutory system was originated in New York,[62] requiring, as to realty, that the power of conveying the absolute fee in possession should not be suspended beyond the statutory period,[63] and that estates in remainder should be so limited that within the statutory period, if ever, they must vest in interest,[64] and, as to personalty, that the absolute ownership should not be suspended beyond the statutory period.[65] The New York system has since been copied or imitated, in part or in whole, in a number of other jurisdictions,[66] and the cases construing and applying the provisions of all such statutes, so far as similar to Every future estate shall be void in its creation, which shall suspend the absolute power of alienation, by any limitation or condition whatever, for a longer period than during the continuance of not more than two lives in being at the creation of the estate; except that a contingent remainder in fee may be created on a prior remainder in fee, to take effect in the event that the persons to whom the first remainder is limited, die under the age of twenty-one years, or on any other contingency by which the estate of such persons may be determined before they attain full age. For the purposes of this section, a minority is deemed a part of a life, and not an absolute term equal to the possible duration of such minority." Real Prop. L. § 42. Real Prop. L. § 50. (2) "A contingent remainder shall not be created on a term of years, unless the nature of the contingency on which it is limited be such that the remainder must vest in interest, during the continuance of not more than two lives in being at the creation of such remainder, or on the termination thereof." In other respects limitations of future or contingent interests in personal property, are subject to the rules prescribed in relation to future estates in real property." Personal Prop. L. § 11. (2) "All the provisions contained in this article, relative to future estates, apply to limitations of chattels real, as well as of freehold estates, so that the absolute ownership of a term of years shall not be suspended for a longer period than the absolute power of alienation can be suspended in respect to a fee." [c] In the District of Columbia a one another, have been considered together in the following sections of this treatise.[67]

Statutes substitutionary for rule against perpetuities. There has been in the decisions some confusion of the statutes relating to suspensions of alienability or ownership with the common-law rule against perpetuities,[68] and in at least one jurisdiction such a statute has been said to be merely declaratory of that rule,[69] and to require the vesting of future interests within the period prescribed;[70] statute providing that "every future estate" shall be void which shall or may suspend the power of alienation of the property beyond the period therein prescribed is applicable to both real and personal property. Iglehart v. Iglehart, 204 U. S. 478, 27 SCt 329, 51 L. ed. 575 [aff 26 App. (D. C.) 209, 6 AnnCas 732].

[d] In Iowa (1) a statute providing that "every disposition of property is void which suspends the absolute power of controlling the same" for a longer period than that therein specified is applicable to both personal and real property. Meek v. Briggs, 87 Iowa 610, 618, 54 NW 456, 43 AmSR 410. (2) The absolute power of control is the absolute power of alienation. "A disposition of property, within the meaning of this statute, is parting with it, transferring it to another, either by deed, or will, or lease. Now, if in so doing, the grantee or devisee is precluded, by the instrument by which he takes the property, from conveying it to another, or, in other words, in the language of the statute, from 'the absolute power of controlling the same' for a longer period than the time limited by law, the disposition is void." Todhunter v. Des Moines, etc., R. Co., 58 Iowa 205, 207, 12 NW 267. But see Jordan v. Woodin, 93 Iowa 453, 61 NW 948; Meek v. Briggs, supra (in both of which the court apparently regarded the statute as requiring vesting).

[e] In Kentucky, a statute providing that "the absolute power of alienation shall not be suspended" by any limitation or condition whatever for a longer period than during the continuance of a life or lives in being at the creation of the estate and twenty-one years and ten months thereafter has been held to be only declaratory of the common-law rule against perpetuities. See cases infra notes 69, 70.

[f] In Michigan (1) the statutes regulating suspensions of alienability and ownership and postponements of vesting apply solely to real estate and chattels real. Michigan Trust Co. v. Baker, 226 Mich. 72, 196 NW 976; Grand Rapids Trust Co. v. Herbst, 220 Mich. 321, 190 NW 250; In re Brown, 198 Mich. 544, 165 NW 929. (2) And the validity of future interests in personalty other than chattels real is governed by the common-law rule against perpetuities. In re Brown, supra; Penny v. "The rule against restraints on alienation has been, in some cases, confused with the rule against perpetuities; but the two rules, while having the same end in view, viz. that of preventing undue interference with the freedom of transfer of property, are of entirely different origin and application. The rule against perpetuities, ingrafted upon our system by the Constitution [art 20 § 9], relates only to future interests in property, the vesting of which is to be postponed beyond the allotted time. The rule relating to restraints on alienation, on the other hand, is statutory in origin, and has reference to an undue prevention of the transfer of estates already vested." In re McCray, (Cal.) 268 P 647, 650.

[a] "There is much want of harmony in the decisions of courts and the writings of textwriters regarding statutes similar to ours, as to their being aimed, primarily, at the prevention of perpetuities, when, by the plain reading thereof, their object is to prevent restraints upon the power to convey real estate—to prevent absolutely taking the title thereto out of the field of business for a longer period than that named therein." Becker v. Chester, 115 Wis. 90, 106, 91 NW 87, 650.

[b] Prof. Gray said: "The Revised Statutes of New York were regarded with great complacency and admiration at the time of their enactment, but, at least on the subjects of trusts and remote limitations, they have produced a woeful amount of confusion and litigation. . . . It would be a great boon to the courts and people of New York, though it is, perhaps, too much to hope for, if the old law . . . of all trusts and of future estates could be restored." Compare Roberts "Kentucky's Statute Against Perpetuities," 16 Ky. L. J. p 97 (discussing the confusion resulting from the uncertainty of the courts as to whether the statute "is an attempt to restate the common law rule against perpetuities or whether it states a new rule as to the length of time a restriction on the power of alienation of an estate will be valid," and advancing the contention that the statute should be regarded as a provision against remoteness of vesting).

"Under this statute, and under the rule against the creation of perpetuities, the validity of any future esbut the proper view appears to be that the statutes substitute a new rule for the common-law rule against perpetuities,[71] which was in force prior to their adoption;[72] and accordingly the only question which now arises in jurisdictions where such statutes have been enacted is as to what limitations are forbidden by them.[73]

The statutes are an expression of the public policy of the state,[74] and the consent of the parties does not authorize the court to enforce an attempt to exceed the statutory period.[75]

Certain other statutory restrictions upon future interests and estates also exist in most of such jurisdictions, and, without regard to whether or not they are strictly to be considered as part of the law against perpetuities,[76] are treated in subsequent sections of this treatise.[77]

Application of statutes. Statutes relating to suspensions of alienability or ownership and postponements of vesting apply equally to interests created by will and by other instruments.[78]

[§ 98] 2. The Statutory Period—a. Measurement—(1) Lives in Being—(a) In General. Except only in those cases where an additional period of minority is permitted,[79] and except in those jurisdictions in which an alternative or additional fixed term of years is authorized by statute,[80] the time for which alienability or ownership of interests within the scope of the statute may be suspended or their vesting postponed is only during the continuance and until the termination of not more than the number of human lives, in being at the creation of the interest or estate, prescribed by the statute,[81] or, when the statute does not restrict the number, of any lives so in being,[82] or for a shorter period,[83] or until the happening of some more proximate event.[84]

The life of the longest liver of several designated persons, by the duration of which a term of suspension or postponement is measured, is equivalent to the number of lives of the persons so designated.[85]

[§ 99] (b) What Lives May Measure the Period—aa. In General. The lives by which a period of suspension of alienability or ownership or of postponement of vesting is measured may be those of any persons,[86] whether beneficiaries of the limitatate depends upon the certainty of its vesting within the prescribed period." Brown v. Columbia Finance, etc., Co., 123 Ky. 775, 781, 97 SW 421, 30 KyL 110. See Jordan v. Woodin, 93 Iowa 453, 61 NW 948; Meek v. Briggs, 87 Iowa 610, 54 NW 456, 43 AmSR 410 (in both of which it would seem that the court regarded the statute as directed against remoteness of vesting rather than against suspension of alienation).

But see In re McCray, (Cal.) 268 P 647, 649 [superseding (A.) 260 P 940] (dictum, that, under Const. [1879] art XX § 9, providing that "no perpetuities shall be allowed except for eleemosynary purposes," the rule against perpetuities is "ingrafted upon" the California system of law, while the rule against restraints on alienation is statutory in origin).

[a] Mr. Chaplin says: "It is important to notice that the Revised Statutes did not affect a 'revival' of the common-law Rule against Perpetuities. The New York rules against undue suspension of alienability, and remoteness of vesting, rest solely upon statutory provisions. These provisions were obviously suggested in part by proposed modifications that had been set forth by English writers. With the aid of that material, and with changes originated by the Revisers themselves, a new plan of treatment was adopted. Upon this plan, the common law throws light. But the plan itself is local, independent, and purely statutory." Suspension of Alien. (3d ed) § 380.

[§ 100] bb. Existence at Creation of the Estate—(aa) In General. The life or lives by whose continuance or termination a suspension of alienability or ownership or a postponement of vesting may be measured must be in being at the creation of the estate.[90]

[§ 101] (bb) Unborn Persons—aaa. In General. In accordance with the rule stated in the preceding section,[91] any limitation under which there might result a suspension or postponement during the lifetime of or until the attainment of a prescribed age by a person unborn and not in being at its creation,[92] as a child[93] or surviving spouse[94] of a living person, is illegal and the attempted suspension or postponement during the lifetime of such person is void.

[§ 103] cc. Designation—(aa) In General. While it is essential that the lives by which a period of suspension of alienability or ownership or of postponement of vesting be indicated in the instrument creating the limitation,[97] in such manner as to be capable of ascertainment,[98] and a suspension or postponement for "the time prescribed by the statute governing perpetuities" is insufficient,[99] it is not necessary that the measuring lives be expressly designated as such;[1] the term may be ascertained from the nature of the limitation when the latter is such as to effect a necessary restriction or termination of the period,[2] and accordingly, if the purpose of a limitation which effects a suspension or postponement must, in its nature, be accomplished during the life of ascertainable persons in being, the duration thereof is sufficiently designated.[3] The lives may, however, be expressly designated,[4] either by naming the persons in particular,[5] or by limiting the estate upon the first life or lives that shall fall in a class of several individuals;[6] and the lives may be designated as those of persons answering a cer-

The ascertainment of a second life may be postponed until the expiration of the first, if provision is duly made for the positive ascertainment of such person at that time,[9] provided the person whose life is so designated must necessarily be one who was in being at the time of the creation of the estate.[10]

[a] Thus, where a trust was created for the life of the testator's widow, with remainder, in the event of the death of the widow before the testator's son, to the son for life, and in the event of the death of the son before the widow, to the testator's daughter for life, "the two lives which govern the duration of the trust in one contingency are not the same two lives which govern its duration in the other. Does this circumstance render the trust void? I do not see why it should. In no event is there a suspension for more than two lives in being at the creation of the trust, and upon any contingency the trust must terminate upon the death of the survivor of two lives in being when it was created. . . . Where a trust is created which by no possibility and in no contingency can endure longer than during the existence of two lives in being, of what consequence can it be that if one contingency happen, the estate is to be measured by two named lives, and if the other contingency happen, the estate is still to be measured by two named lives, but one of them is different from the one named in the other contingency? So long as both contingencies cannot happen the number of lives upon whose duration the trust term is to be limited cannot be more than two actually named and in existence when the trust was created. I cannot discover any reason which forbids such a contingency and such a limitation imposed thereon. I have not been able to discover any authorities upon this precise point, and we must, therefore, rest our decision upon the general principle that so long as the trust can last but two lives, which two shall be the selected ones may be left to the happening of a contingency such as exists in this case." or until a fixed future day,[45] or until a designated person, if living, would attain his majority or other specified age,[46] or for a period dependent in part upon life and in part upon a fixed term,[47] or for any other period of time,[48] however short,[49] not measured by the duration of a human life or lives, is prohibited, unless such definite or fixed term is further limited by a provision for an earlier termination of the suspension or vesting of the interests or estates within or at the end of a period properly measured by lives.[50]

Where a term of years is authorized by statute, during which a suspension or postponement may continue, after the expiration of lives in being,[51] a suspension or postponement which would or might exceed the permitted period after the termination of the measuring lives is wholly void;[52] thus a limitation which would suspend the alienability of property until the attainment by the children of a living person of an age greater than the statutory number of years is void,[53] in view of the possibility that such person may have issue at any time during his life,[54] and that a child may not attain the specified age after his death within the statutory period;[55] but a suspension for a term of years without reference to lives is valid if it does not exceed the number of years specified by the statute.[56] And where a period of years, in the alternative to a period measured by lives, is permitted by statute,[57] a suspension or postponement for a fixed period not greater than that prescribed is valid.[58]

[§ 108] (3) Terms of Indefinite Duration. Except where there is employed a controlling provision limiting the ultimate possible duration of a suspension of the alienability or ownership of property, or postponement of the vesting of interests or estates therein, to a period not greater than that permitted by statute,[59] any limitation which would or might occasion such a suspension or postponement for an indefinite time, not measured by the continuance or termination of a life or lives in being,[60] as, for example, a suspension or postponement for such time as trustees may deem proper,[61] or until the happening of an event which may not occur within the statutory period,[62] or until the payment of be-

[a] Constitutionality of statute.— The contention that Civ. Code § 715 subd 2, permitting the power of alienation to be suspended for a period not exceeding twenty-five years from the creation of the limitation, is contrary to the provisions of Const. (1879) art XX § 20, providing that "No perpetuities shall be allowed except for eleemosynary purposes," in establishing a period for suspensions of alienability greater than the period prescribed for vesting by the common law against perpetuities, to which it is claimed the constitution refers, is without merit. quests[63] or of debts or encumbrances,[64] or, except in the case of charitable gifts or trusts,[65] a perpetual suspension or postponement,[66] is unauthorized and void.

[§ 109] (4) Additional Period of Minority.[67] By some statutes[68] it is provided, as an exception to the rule that a suspension of alienability or ownership or a postponement of vesting cannot continue longer than during the continuance and until the termination of lives in being,[69] that, in the cases of real estate and chattels real, a contingent remainder in fee may be created on a prior remainder in fee, to take effect in the event that the persons to whom the first remainder is limited die under the age of twenty-one years, or on any other contingency by which the estate of such persons may be determined before they attain full age.[70] Under such a provision, only one such contingent remainder can validly be created,[71] and successive remainders contingent upon death before majority are not permitted.[72] It is not essential thereunder that either the infant remainderman[73] or the ultimate remainderman[74] should be a person in being at the creation of the estate.

As to personal property other than chattels real, if the statute makes no exception to the general rule,[75] an attempted suspension or postponement for an additional period of minority after lives in being is void.[76]

[§ 110] (5) Subordinate Measures of the Period.[77] When the ultimate possible duration of a term of suspension or postponement is duly restricted to a period permitted by statute, any subordinate measure of the duration of such suspension or postponement may be employed.[78] Thus, under such a controlling restriction, it follows that a suspension or postponement for a fixed[79] or indefi-

[a] "Such contingent remainder over operates to reduce the absolute fee of the devisee first named, to a determinable fee. But the condition on which the remainder over is to take effect is a condition subsequent. It does not prevent the vesting of the fee in the first devisee, but merely renders such fee defeasible by condition subsequent." Radley v. Kuhn, 97 N. Y. 26, 35.

Statutes quoted see supra § 97 notes 63–65.

71. Temple v. Hawley, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 153. Compare Monypeny v. Monypeny, 202 N. Y. 90, 95 NE 1 (holding that the statutory provision permitting suspension for an additional term of minority cannot save a limitation of a remainder, after a life estate, to the youngest of the life tenant's children arriving at the age of twenty-one, inasmuch as the remainder which each of the several children would be entitled to is not given over on his failure to arrive at the age of twenty-one, but only on the failure of the arrival of the youngest at such age, which provision is not within the statutory exception). But see Adams v. Berger, 18 NYS 33, 27 AbbNCas 429 (holding that, where realty was devised for life to testator's daughter, with remainder in fee to her children who should survive her, provided such children should attain twenty-one years of age, and, in the event of the death of any such child before such age, remainder to the survivors, the statutory period for the limitation of future estates was not transcended, the suspension or postponement in no event being continued beyond the life of the daughter and the minority of her children).

[a] Construction of statute.— "One construction that has been suggested is, that the statute authorizes successive remainders over, in fee, in case of successive terminations of prior remainders during minority; or successive cross remainders over among the members of a class, in case of the termination of individual shares during minority, with a possible ultimate remainder over in case all the original shares are thus terminated. Another is, that it authorizes alternative ultimate remainders in fee, one or the other to vest, according to the contingency, in case of the failure of the prior remainder during minority. Another suggests the view that only one ultimate remainder can be provided for in any event. . . . The statute in question itself speaks of the remainder, upon the termination of which a fee may be limited over, as the 'first' remainder. . . . The use of the plural, in the statute quoted, is no doubt to be understood as referring to the fact that the remainder may be limited to tenants in common, in shares, each share to be judged on its own merits. It would seem quite clear, therefore, that in the exceptional case provided for, the suspension, or postponement of vesting, can in no event extend, in addition to two designated lives, beyond the majority, or earlier death, of one infant. By the end of two designated lives, and the majority or earlier death of the infant, the suspension and the postponement of vesting must cease." Chaplin Suspension of Alien. (2d ed) §§ 87, 90. See also op. cit. (3d ed) § 128 (to same effect).

72. Temple v. Hawley, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 153, 178; and cases supra note 71.

[a] Thus, where a will contained a devise of property to testator's daughter for life, with remainder to those children of the daughter who should survive her, provided such children attain the age of twenty-one years, with remainder over, the statute permits persons to be included within the first remainder who may be born after testator's death but prior to the death of the daughter. [§ 111] (6) Circumstances at Creation of Limitation as Affecting Measurement of Period—(a) In General. While the validity of a limitation directing a suspension or postponement is determined by the possibility of exceeding the statutory period and not by subsequent actual events,[86] the term for which such suspension or postponement might or could continue is computed with reference to the circumstances existing at the time the limitation takes effect.[87]

[§ 112] (b) Predecease of Measuring Life. In accordance with the rule just stated,[88] when a person by whose life a suspension or postponement is attempted to be measured is dead when the instrument takes effect, the limitation is to be read as if it contained no provision for suspension or postponement during such life;[89] and so where a will according to its terms would create a suspension for an excessive period, but before the death of the testator one or more of the measuring lives has expired, the limitation is not invalid if the remaining provisions do not create an illegal suspension.[90]

[§ 113] (c) Prior Arrival at Majority or Specified Age. In accordance with the rule stated above,[91] where a suspension or postponement is directed to continue for the minority of a designated person, and such person has reached full age at the time the limitation takes effect,[92] or where the suspension or postponement is directed to continue until the attainment by such person of a specified age, and he has attained such age,[93] the limitation is to be treated as if such person had not been designated as one of the measuring lives; thus, where a will fixes, as the termination of the period of suspension or postponement, the attainment of their majority or any other specified age by a greater number of persons than the number of lives specified by the statute, and at the death of the testator not more than the statutory number of persons remain minors or are under the age specified, the limitation does not violate the statute.[94]

[§ 114] b. Successive Suspensions—(1) In General. Where successive suspensions of alienability or ownership or successive postponements of vesting are occasioned by the terms of separate instruments which together form an entire scheme of disposition, the period of all such suspensions or postponements is to be computed, for the purpose of determining their legality, from the date upon which the first limitation took effect.[95] The owner of a remainder or reversion may, however, validly so limit

The provision must be judged as created in the instrument, unaffected by facts subsequently arising").

[a] Thus (1) where a testator devised property in trust for his wife for her life and then to his two grandchildren for their lives, but the wife died before the testator, there was no suspension of the power of alienation beyond the period permitted by the statute. "Whatever might have been the effect, had . . . his wife survived him, matters not, as, by her death before him, the legacies and devises to her lapsed and are not to be considered in estimating the terms within which alienation is restrained or the absolute ownership suspended. (2) Where, by the terms of a will, the power of alienation of property was suspended during the lives of three children of the testator, the court said: "Had all these [children] been living when the testator died, there would have been a clear suspension of the power of alienation beyond the statutory period. Two, only, of the children, however, were then living; and in applying the statutory rule to the provisions of a will, it is certain, that lives in being at the death of the testator, are alone to be considered." his interest as to occasion a suspension or postponement for the full statutory period, notwithstanding any suspensions or postponements theretofore created in the limitation of such remainder or the reservation of such reversion,[96] except, it would seem, when such successive dispositions are made in furtherance of a general scheme to evade the statutory restrictions.[97] Thus one who suspends the alienability or ownership of his property, real or personal, for a valid period, retaining the reversion,[98] or the owner of a remainder limited on a suspension for a valid period,[99] may subsequently, and as a separate transaction, dispose of such reversion or remainder by limitations creating a suspension or postponement for the full statutory period, measured from the date of such subsequent disposition.

[§ 115] (2) Execution of Power.[1] Where a suspension or postponement is directed by the terms of an instrument disposing of property under a power theretofore conferred, the period for which such suspension or postponement may continue is to be reckoned from the date of the creation of the power and not from the time of its exercise,[2] except, perhaps, in the case of a power such that the donee becomes vested with an absolute fee,[3] in which case the term is to be computed only from the date of the exercise of the power.[4] It has accordingly been said that, with the exception just mentioned,[5] the validity of an appointment made under a power is determined by reading it as if it had been incorporated in the instrument conferring the power;[6] but the principle so stated is probably not a proper test in every case.[7]

[§ 116] c. Takers and Beneficiaries during the Period.[8] When by a controlling provision a valid restriction is placed upon the ultimate time for which any suspension of alienability or ownership or any postponement of vesting may continue, any interests may be limited, successively or concurrently, to or for the benefit of any number of persons,[9]

[a] Rule applied.—Where a donor created a trust for the life of his daughter to cease and revert to him upon her death without issue, he had an estate in expectancy, which by statute is alienable in the same manner as an estate in possession, and consequently when by his will he gave his residuary estate in trust for two lives, and his daughter died without issue so that her trust fund fell into the residuary estate, there was no suspension of the ownership beyond the statutory period. New York L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Cary, 191 N. Y. 33, 83 NE 598.

[b] "It must freely be conceded that this conclusion permits the owner of an expectant estate in personal property to suspend the absolute ownership for more than two lives in being by means of different instruments; but this result is by no means so alarming in contemplation as counsel seem to apprehend. . . . But it is believed that there is at least one class of cases where the use of the 'reading-in' formula would lead to a different and incorrect result. The rule relating to these exceptional cases may be summarized as follows: Where of two instruments, the one creating a power of disposition and the other exercising it, the former by its own terms occasions a suspension for one life and the latter attempts by its own terms to occasion a suspension for two or more lives, and the result of incorporating the provisions of the later into the earlier would be to eliminate from consideration the suspension which occasion the suspension under the earlier instrument, the reading-in formula is inapplicable"). "The fact that a number of persons are to be benefited under the trust . . . [during the measuring lives] does not create a trust beyond two lives in being contrary to the statute." Bailey v. Bailey, 97 N. Y. 460, 469.

[a] A gift of income from a trust fund until a specified aggregate sum shall have been paid creates no illegal suspension of the absolute ownership, where the trust fund from which the income so bequeathed is to be derived will by its terms end within the statutory period. Matter of Mills, 107 Misc. 592, 176 NYS 883.

[c] A trust to cease on the death of the trustee (1) does not unlawfully suspend the power of alienation, although for the benefit of more than two cestuis. Hunter v. Hunter, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 334. But see Allen v. Litchard, 93 Misc. 197, 157 NYS 19 [aff 179 App. Div. 959 mem, 166 NYS 1085 mem] (where the court failed to apply this rule). (2) Un-without regard to the number of lives that may run their course before the termination of the life or lives by whose duration the term is measured,[10] and whether or not such takers or beneficiaries are in being[11] or ascertainable[12] at the creation of the interests, provided they must become ascertained, if at all, during the term.[13]

A provision for changing trustees at a future time causes no unlawful suspension where the ultimate duration of the trust is properly restricted.[14]

[§ 117] d. Possibility of Exceeding Statutory Period—(1) In General. In determining whether a suspension of the alienability or ownership of property or a postponement of its vesting may continue for a longer period than that prescribed by statute,[15] there must be considered not what has actually happened since the creation of the limitation but what might have happened;[16] and any limitation which, in any contingency possible under the circumstances existing at its creation, may create a suspension or postponement for an illegal period is void,[17] even though in other contingencies the term would end within the period prescribed by statute.[18] Accordingly, to be valid, every interest must be so limder a will giving property to the testator's wife for life, in trust for herself and a son, and on her death appointing a sister as trustee and giving her one third of the income during her life, the trust was limited to the lives of the widow and sister, and consequently did not offend the statute. Stewart v. Stewart, 205 App. Div. 587, 200 NYS 168.

[d] Where the trust res is only a life estate, the trust cannot create an illegal suspension, notwithstanding the number of beneficiaries named or the interests created, since it must terminate upon the death of the cestui que vie. Grout v. Van Schoonhoven, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 336.

[e] A trust to pay income to the employees of a corporation is valid where the trust term is restricted to the duration of the lives of two persons in being. [f] A life estate by entirety, limited to a husband and wife, can suspend the power of alienation no longer than the duration of one life, that of the survivor, who takes the whole estate, although both tenants enjoy the benefit of the property for their lives, and consequently a further life estate, with remainder over, can create no illegal suspension under a statute limiting the period to that of two lives. [a] Agreement by common owners not to partition.—An agreement among the owners in common of certain real estate that none would bring an action for the partition thereof without the consent of all is not invalid as suspending the power of alienation, inasmuch as all the owners acting together can at any time they see fit convey title; and in addition the death of any one of the parties would terminate the agreement.

persons in whom the right of alienation resides,[27] how many or what estates are created or exist in the property,[28] and whether they are vested or contingent.[29]

This rule is, however, subject to the qualification that, if the proceeds of property so conveyed are by the terms of the limitation made inalienable, a suspension continues within the meaning of the statute notwithstanding the alienability of the particular property.[30]

The mere possibility of releasing or forfeiting an interest to which one is or may become entitled does not remove the interest from the scope of the statute,[31] such possibility not being the power of alienation contemplated by the statute.[32]

Methods of occasioning suspension. In general, the power of alienation may be suspended only by an express trust or power in trust or by a contingent limitation.[33] It should be noted, however, that not every such interest or limitation causes a suspension.[34]

[§ 120] b. Legal Estates—(1) In General. Under the rule and subject to the qualification above stated,[35] a vested remainder in real property causes no suspension of the power of alienation where the remaindermen and the owners of the prior estates have the power to convey an absolute fee;[36] and no suspension is occasioned by the limitation of any future legal estate on a contingency of time or event only, where the persons in whom the estate will vest, if at all, are in being and ascertainable,[37] nor on any other contingency, where all the persons who

[a] In some cases it is said there are only two ways (1) by which a suspension of alienation may be accomplished: Either by the creation of a trust which vests the estate in trustees, or by the creation of contingent estates vesting upon the occurrence of some future event. Wilber v. Wilber, 165 N. Y. 451, 59 NE 264; Murphy v. Whitney, 140 N. Y. 541, 35 NE 930, 24 LRA 123, 31 AbbNCas 86; Everitt v. Everitt, 29 N. Y. 39; Leonard v. Burr, 18 N. Y. 96; Matter of Roberts, 112 App. Div. 732, 98 NYS 809. (2) It would seem, however, that the possibility of suspension by powers is not intended to be denied by these cases. Thus, it has been said: "There are but two modes in which the absolute power of alienation can be suspended, viz.: by an express trust or power in trust . . . or by a contingent limitation." Radley v. Kuhn, 97 N. Y. 26, 34 [quot Matter of Kalter, 86 Misc. 621, 623, 148 NYS 921, 12 Mills Surr. 384].

[a] Illustrations.—(1) A gift of property to testator's widow for life, and after her death to the use of testator's five children with remainder absolutely to the survivor of them, did not create any suspension of ownership or of the power of alienation, since every person who could by any possibility or contingency become the absolute owner was then in existence, and every estate, interest, right, and possibility, present and future, vested and contingent, in the property was represented by a living person capable of alienating and conveying at his option the estate and interest represented. pay annuities therefrom,[54] and trusts for accumulation,[55] suspend the power of alienation so long as they continue.

A trust to begin in the future causes a suspension of the power of alienation if the legal title or beneficial interests under it will be inalienable.[56]

[§ 123] (b) Effect of Right To Sell, Revoke, or Terminate. A suspension of alienability otherwise occasioned by a trust[57] is obviated by the reservation to the settlor of an absolute right to revoke the trust[58] or by a grant to the trustee of the absolute right to terminate it,[59] although the property still remains subject to any statutory requirements as to vesting.[60] Accordingly, a power given the trustee to sell and transfer the trust property obviates any suspension of the power of alienation, otherwise existing, where the alienability or ownership of the proceeds is not suspended;[61] but if the suspension continues as to the proceeds the power of sale does not remove the trust from the operation of the statute, although the particular property out of which they come is capable of being transferred,[62] the dispo-

The statutory provision that an accumulation of the rents and profits of real property directed to commence subsequent to the creation of the estate must commence within the time permitted for the vesting of future estates, means that it may commence either during the term of two designated lives in being (and either at or subsequent to the birth of the infant), or at the end, or immediately upon the termination of two such lives, and then continue through the minority of the infant by virtue of the special provision in Real Property Law § 42, for suspension during the minority, even after two lives in being." [a] Rule applied.—Where a trust was created for the benefit of the settlor during his life, and on his death for two other persons for their lives, with remainder over, and a power of revocation was reserved to the settlor, the absolute ownership was not suspended during the settlor's life, and would not be suspended until he should die without having revoked the trust, at which time ownership would be suspended only during the lives of two persons, and consequently the trust was valid. [a] Power to sell need not be imperative, nor is it essential that there be persons in being who can compel its exercise; it is sufficient in order to obviate suspension that the trustee has a discretionary right to sell the property and terminate the trust. Becker v. Chester, 115 Wis. 90, 91 NW 87, 650.

[b] Where suspension of ownership of personalty is not restricted by statute, a power given a trustee to sell the real estate of the trust at any time, and convert it into money, obviates the effect of an excessive suspension of the power of alienation of the land, since the trust of the proceeds of sale could cause no illegal suspension. sition of the proceeds being the controlling factor.[63] If, however, the right of revocation or termination is dependent upon a contingency[64] or is exercisable only at a future time,[65] the suspension otherwise existing is not thereby obviated; but a provision that a power of sale be exercised at a specified time does not render it conditional where such provision is merely advisory or precatory and is not a restraint upon the power,[66] and a provision that no sale shall be made except after advertisement for a definite period is unobjectionable if it is a reasonable precaution to prevent a sacrifice of the property.[67]

Consent of cestuis to termination.[68] It has been held that, where trustees are authorized, upon the consent of beneficiaries who are ascertainable and sui juris, to sell or distribute the trust property and terminate the trust, a suspension of alienability, otherwise existing, is thereby obviated,[69] notwithstanding the number of the persons whose consent may be required[70] or the length of the time during which such consent may be given;[71] but there is authority to the contrary, where the beneficiary whose consent is essential might die before the expiration of the trust term, inasmuch as it would thereby become impossible to obtain his consent to an earlier termination.[72]

Termination in disregard of trust. A suspension otherwise caused by a trust is not obviated by an option given the trustee to distribute the property before the expiration of the specified term where such distribution, if made, would be in disregard of the trust purposes.[73]

Revocation upon consent of cestuis. Where by virtue of a statute trusts are revocable upon the written consent of all the beneficiaries,[74] such a trust occasions no suspension of the power to alienate the trust property during the life of the settlor.[75]

[§ 124] (2) Under Powers.[76] Under the rule and subject to the qualification above stated,[77] beneficial powers,[78] and powers in trust, the beneficial interests in which are alienable by persons in being and ascertainable,[79] cause no suspension of the power of alienation, even where they are to be ex-

Y. 429, 103 NE 706] (holding that no suspension was caused by a trust which was terminable by the settlor by payment to the trustee of a specified sum of money, such sum to be held in trust and invested for the trust purposes).

N. D.—Penfield v. Tower, 1 N. D. 216, 46 NW 413.

"A power to exchange one piece of property for another, or to sell it for the purpose of investing the proceeds in a different manner, is not a power to alien the estate within the meaning of the statute." Hawley v. James, supra.

[a] Power to sell and reinvest.—A trust to hold, manage, and sell property and reinvest the proceeds and pay them over at the expiration of an illegal term is not relieved by the power of sale from the operation of the statute, for while the power to alienate the land is not suspended, the power to alienate the proceeds of sale is suspended for the illegal term. Peabody v. Kent, 153 App. Div. 286, 138 NYS 32 [mod 213 N. Y. 154, 107 NE 51].

[b] Discretion of trustee to continue suspension.—Where a trustee of a trust to receive rents and profits is given power of sale, but is authorized in his discretion to turn back the proceeds of sale into the improvement of the remaining real estate, and it is only the net profits remaining which he is to distribute to the beneficiaries during the term, an exercise of the power of sale would not ipso facto terminate the trust and consequently it does not obviate the suspension of the power of alienation. Stanley v. Payne, 65 Misc. 77, 119 NYS 570.

[c] Suspension resulting from uncertainty as to distributees.—A trust for lives, with remainder to testator's grandchildren who should be living at the end of such time, suspends the power of alienation, notwithstanding there is a power of sale, for the persons ultimately entitled to the proceeds could not be ascertained until the expiration of the lives. Y. 429, 103 NE 706] (holding that a trust caused no suspension of alienability or ownership where by its terms the trustee was given authority to transfer the property in the event of default in certain payments to be made by the settlor).

[a] Sale at prescribed price.—A power of sale does not obviate a suspension where the power is restricted to a sale at a prescribed minimum price. Stewart v. Woolley, 121 App. Div. 531, 106 NYS 99.

[b] Inability to lease advantageously.—A trust to continue for three lives is not rendered valid by a provision giving the trustee power to set apart a separate trust fund for each of the three, where the right to sell the property and establish such funds is permissive only and conditioned upon the inability of the trustee to rent or lease the property for a reasonable amount. Matter of Rohr, 130 Misc. 174, 223 NYS 782.

[c] Habits, capacity, and circumstances of beneficiaries.—A trust otherwise directed to continue for three lives is not rendered unobjectionable by power given the trustee to terminate it and pay over the corpus to the beneficiaries whenever the trustee shall judge that such payment would be best for the beneficiaries, considering their habits, capacity, ability and circumstances. In re Perkins, 245 N. Y. 478, 157 NE 750.

[d] Permission of court.—(1) A power of sale exercisable only provided that the supreme court upon petition made to it should permit such sale to be made does not obviate a suspension. Fowler v. Ingersoll, 127 N. Y. 472, 28 NE 471. (2) A suspension caused by a trust for a married woman is not obviated by the provision of the Married Women's Act of 1848, as amended by Act (1849) § 2, providing that a trustee for a married woman may at her request convey the property to her if a justice of the supreme court certifies that he has made due inquiry into the circumstances and the capacity of the married woman, since the power to distribute is dependent upon the consent of a judge of the court and cannot be exercised by the conjoint action of the trustee and beneficiary. ercised at a future time.[80] But imperative powers in trust,[81] under which persons not in being,[82] or the trustee of a trust in which beneficial interests are inalienable,[83] may become beneficially interested suspend the power of alienation so long as they exist; and a power exercisable only after a specified time[84] or upon a contingency[85] suspends the power of alienation if the beneficial interest is inalienable in the interim.

[§ 125] d. alienation except in such case,[97] subject to the qualification that a suspension continues notwithstanding alienability of the particular property if by the terms of the gift or limitation the proceeds of a sale or exchange are made inalienable,[98] the ownership is absolute only when the interests are all vested as well as alienable;[99] and an interest which is either contingent or inalienable is suspended in ownership.[1]

Methods of occasioning suspension. It has sometimes been said that the absolute ownership of property is suspended only by the creation of a trust which vests the title in trustees or by the creation of contingent estates vesting upon the occurrence of some future event.[2] It should be noted, however, that not every trust occasions a suspension,[3] and on the other hand that suspension may be caused in certain cases by the creation of powers.[4]

[§ 131] b. Legal Interests. Under the general rule above stated,[5] the absolute ownership of property is not suspended by the creation of vested particular interests or estates and a vested remainder;[6] but a limitation of a contingent interest suspends the absolute ownership so long as the contingency exists,[7] even though all the persons who might by any possibility become entitled thereto are in being and can be ascertained.[8] Thus, where it is uncertain in which of existing persons[9] or which members of a class[10] an interest will vest, or where persons not in being may become entitled to an in-"The first question is whether, in the case of personal property, the requirement of 'absolute ownership' by the end of the statutory period . . . involves both alienability and vesting. As to alienability, it has always been recognized that it is a necessary element of absolute ownership. . . . And in respect to vesting, it is also settled that so long as it remains uncertain which of two or more persons,—even though they are all in being and could together alienate the property—will turn out to be the particular one in whom it will vest at last, the absolute ownership is suspended. . . . The rule against remoteness of vesting, as relating to real property, is also applicable to personal property." Chaplin Suspension of Alien. (3d ed) § 464.

[a] A will creating life estates but no remainder vests the life estates in the legatees, and the corpus passes as intestate property to the next of kin, so that the two classes together are absolute owners of the property and there is no suspension of ownership. Hatch v. Bassett, 52 N. Y. 359.

[b] The creation of three life estates in personal property, with vested remainder, does not violate the statute restricting the term of suspension to the duration of two lives, inasmuch as there is no suspension of the absolute ownership. In re Conger, 81 App. Div. 493, 80 NYS 933.

[a] Any contingency suspends absolute ownership.—(1) "In the case of real property, the only contingencies which suspend the absolute power of alienation, are those which involve an absence of persons in being by whom an absolute fee in possession can be conveyed. That proposition applies also to personal property. In the case of real property, the rule against undue suspension of alienability is not the only rule affecting the validity of future estates. A future estate, to be valid, must be so limited that it will vest by the end of the statutory period. That proposition likewise applies to personal property, and if either the person to whom, or the event on which, a future interest is limited to take effect is uncertain, that interest is either contingent and inalienable, or contingent and alienable, and in either case the absolute ownership is suspended." terest,[11] the absolute ownership is suspended.

A gift subject to defeasance occasions a suspension,[12] inasmuch as neither the first donee nor the donee under the conditional limitation possesses absolute ownership, even though both are in being.[13]

[§ 132] c. Beneficial Interests—(1) Under Trusts.[14] Under the rule and subject to the qualification above stated,[15] trusts in which the beneficial interests are alienable by persons in being and capable of being ascertained occasion no suspension of the absolute ownership;[16] but, except where a right of termination or revocation exists,[17] ownership is suspended by trusts in which beneficial interests are inalienable.[18] Thus, under statutes providing that the beneficiaries thereof shall acquire no interest in the trust property, or rendering their interests nontransferrable,[19] and statutes prohibiting transfers by trustees in contravention of a trust,[20] trusts to receive income, and to pay or apply it to the use of any person,[21] or from it to pay annuities,[22] and trusts for accumulation,[23-24] suspend the ownership so long as they continue.

[the remaindermen] were to have the fee and the estate itself being too remote;" but the court appears to have confused the statutory requirements as to suspension of alienability with the common-law rule against remoteness of vesting); Vandenburgh v. Vandenburgh, 85 Misc. 131, 147 NYS 244, 11 Mills Surr. 561 (where a remainder upon a devise of life estates to testator's widow and two sons, and the survivor of them, was held invalid as to the share passing from the wife to the son first dying and then through the son dying second to the remainderman, on the ground that it suspended the power of alienation, the necessity of vesting within the statutory period being discussed only incidentally).

[a] Rule applied.—Where testator created a trust to receive income and apply it to the use of his daughter during her life, and after her death pay the income to her issue in equal shares, and as each child should attain majority one equal share of the principal to be paid to it, with the provision that if the daughter should die leaving no issue born to her who should attain majority the principal should be paid over to testator's other children, the remainder to the latter children was contingent, and although the power of alienation was not suspended, the remainder was void, because it was not so limited that it must vest, if ever, at the end of two lives in being at the creation of the estate. Douglass, 192 Wis. 486, 213 NW 320 ("assuming" that vesting within the statutory period is required by the New York statute, but criticizing the doctrine); and cases infra this note.

[a] Rule applied.—(1) Under a trust to continue for ten years to pay the income to two children, and in case of the death of one before that time the trust fund to pass to the survivor, with remainder over in case of the death of both within such period, the children have vested remainders each in one half of the trust fund, subject to defeasance in case of death within the ten years, and all contingent remainders will vest, if at all, upon the termination of their two lives. Matter of Hicks, 221 App. Div. 378, 223 NYS 295. (2) Under a trust for testator's wife for life, remainder to be divided between two daughters for their respective lives, with remainder at the death of one without issue to the issue of the survivor and in case of death of both without issue remainder over, the ultimate remainder over violates the rule, since at the death of the first daughter the other might not have any issue in whom the remainder could vest, and it would remain suspended until the death of the other daughter before remainder over could take effect as the surviving daughter might have issue born at any time during her life. Faber v. Hauck, 80 Misc. 442, 141 NYS 153.

45. See cases supra notes 41–44.

[a] "What the statute means is that the remainder must be so limited that by the terms of its creation it must either vest within the statu-nical remainders as that term is used at common law,[46] but applies to all future legal estates upon a contingency.[47] It does not apply to reversions,[48] or to rights of entry for condition broken.[49]

Remainderman not in esse. It is no objection that a remainder is limited in favor of a person or persons not in being at its creation,[50] provided the contingency upon which the final vesting depends must happen, if ever, and the persons entitled to take be ascertained, within the statutory period for the vesting of estates.[51]

Effect of invalidity. When a remainder is invalid because in violation of a statutory requirement of vesting,[52] it would seem that the limitation is to be given effect as if such remainder had not been attempted to be created.[53]

[§ 139] 6. Disabilities Not within Statute—a. Postponement of Possession—(1) In General. Mere postponement of the possession and enjoyment of an interest in real[54] or personal[55] property does not constitute a suspension of the alienability or ownership thereof, within the meaning of the statute, inasmuch as the postponement of possession does not prevent the interest from vesting or from being conveyed or transferred.[56]

[§ 140] (2) Gifts Payable in Installments. Under the rule relating to postponement of possession and enjoyment,[57] the fact that a gift or legacy, vested in interest and alienable, is to be paid or delivered in installments does not suspend its alienability or absolute ownership.[58]

47. Walker v. Marcellus, etc., R. Co., 226 N. Y. 347, 123 NE 726.

[a] Springing use.—Where the owner of property conveyed it to another, reserving to himself a portion of it occupied by a lime kiln so long as the same should be occupied and used, the estate conveyed as to such portion of the property was a future estate which would not necessarily vest, if ever, at the end of the statutory period, and consequently was void. Walker v. Marcellus, etc., R. Co., 226 N. Y. 347, 123 NE 726.

[b] Statutory definition of remainder.—"Where a future estate is dependent on a precedent estate, it may be termed a remainder, and may be created and transferred by that name." Real Prop. L. § 38.

48. Strong v. Shatto, 45 Cal. A. 29, 187 P 159.

[a] Mr. Chaplin says: "The New York rule in relation to remoteness of vesting applies to future estates created by a grant or devise. A reversion is not a future estate, and it is not created. It is an estate 'left . . . by the operation or construction of law,' in the grantor or devisor, or those claiming under him, and they are the persons who will ultimately take it in possession, quite irrespective of any question of remoteness. An attempt to hold it void for remoteness would be futile. If such an attempt were made, the estate would still have to go somewhere, and those same people would be the ones to whom it would belong." [a] Thus, where the owner of property conveyed it, excepting and reserving a portion thereof occupied by a lime kiln so long as the same should be so used and occupied, and the future estate so attempted to be granted, being of the nature of a springing use, was void because it would not necessarily vest in the grantee, if ever, within the statutory period, it was held that the absolute fee remained in the grantor, and he could maintain an action in ejectment against the grantee's successor in title. [a] Rule applied.—(1) A present gift, the possession of which is postponed until the last of four children shall attain his majority, creates no illegal suspension. Matter of Bray, 118 App. Div. 533, 102 NYS 989. (2) Where, at the death of a designated person in being, trustees are directed to pay over the corpus of property to his children, a provision that should any of the beneficiaries be infants, then their portion shall be paid to them as and when they severally reach the age of twenty-one, the income meantime to go to their support severally, does not prevent vesting of the remainder in such infants, and the postponement of possession created no suspension of the power of alienation. Bascom v. Weed, 53 Misc. 496, 105 NYS 459. (3) Where property is given on trust for the life of a designated person and the minority of another, to be divided among designated persons within one year after the termination of such minority, the one year allowed for division is not a suspension of the power of alienation, and consequently the trust is not invalid. "A mere postponement of the time of payment of a legacy or delivery of property does not make a legacy contingent or unlawfully suspend the power of alienation." Orange County Trust Co. v. Morrison, 56 Misc. 88, 91, 106 NYS 940.

[a] Rule applied.—(1) Where property is given in trust for two lives, with remainder absolutely to the issue of the second life tenant, to be paid to them as each child arrives at full age, there is no illegal suspension of ownership or of the power of alienation, the provision for payment merely suspending the power of enjoyment. (4) Where a will creates a testamentary trust otherwise valid, the time necessarily required for administrative work preliminary to the distribution of the property among the legatees will not render it invalid as possibly exceeding the statutory period. [§ 141] b. Infancy. The power of alienation or absolute ownership of an interest or estate in property is not suspended, within the meaning of the statute, by the infancy of a taker or beneficiary thereof.[59]

[§ 142] c. Suspension of Civil Rights. A suspension of the civil rights of a taker or beneficiary of an interest or estate in property by reason of his conviction of crime[60] does not constitute a suspension of ownership or alienability within the meaning of the statute.[61]

[§ 143] d. Prohibition of Alienation. No suspension of the alienability or ownership of property is effected merely by a provision prohibiting alienation by one to whom an absolute interest or estate is granted or devised.[62] While there is language in some cases to the effect that such a provision is void where the period of the prohibition may exceed the statutory period during which a suspension of alienability or ownership may legally continue,[63] nevertheless, where the point has actually been considered, it has been held that only the condition fails in such case, and the interest or estate granted is not thereby invalidated,[64] although it may be void for other reasons;[65] and so it would seem that, when such a prohibition is invalid, the real ground of its invalidity is its repugnancy to the estate granted or devised,[66] and that the statute regulating constitutes a simple legacy with the time of payment postponed, and the gifts to the legatees are vested interests, transferable by them, so the ownership is not suspended. In re Trumble, 199 N. Y. 454, 92 NE 1073.

It is well settled, that, at common law, a perpetual and total restriction upon the power of alienation of an estate in fee-simple is void, as repugnant to the estate, and its failure does not affect the validity of the grant or devise. . . . It is not necessary, in the present case, to pronounce against the validity of all partial restraints of alienation in the case of estates in fee; it is enough to say, that they cannot be sustained, when they go beyond the limits fixed by the law of perpetuities. As the restrictions in . . . the testator's will are repugnant to the devise, and may suspend the power of alienation beyond two lives, they are void; but the devise is good"); Hacker v. Hacker, 153

suspensions of alienability and ownership has no application to a mere prohibition of the alienation of a vested interest.[67]

[§ 144] 7. Charitable Gifts[68]—a. In General. While, in the absence of any provision excepting charitable trusts from statutes restricting suspension of alienability and ownership, such trusts have been held to be subject thereto,[69] it is the rule in most jurisdictions, under specific statutory exceptions[70] or general statutes authorizing gifts and trusts for charitable uses,[71] that statutes relating to suspensions of alienability or ownership have no application to present gifts to charitable organizations or upon charitable trusts,[72] and accordingly such trusts may be perpetual.[73]

A charitable trust to commence in futuro at a time

App. Div. 270, 138 NYS 194 [rev 75 Misc. 380, 133 NYS 266] (where the lower court held a provision prohibiting alienation except within the donee's family void as an illegal suspension of alienability, but on appeal the invalidity was placed on the ground of repugnancy).

"The fact that a prohibition of alienation is to extend during more than two lives, or during a period not measured by lives, or through a long time, even though measured by one or by two lives, may constitute evidence of unreasonableness, or repugnancy to intent or to the law. But it is the fact of repugnancy, and not the theory of any undue suspension of alienability, that counts. If it is repugnant, it is void, and no suspension results. If it is not, repugnant, it is valid, and no suspension results. The two-lives measure for the term of suspension has no application to cases of mere prohibition of any alienation by an absolute owner, except as the proposed continuance of the prohibition may indicate that it is 'repugnant' to the estate granted or devised. There is no ground for a doctrine that all prohibitions are valid if confined within two lives in being." Chaplin, op. cit. § 176.

[a] Gift to municipality for kindergarten.—A gift to a municipality for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a kindergarten is not subject to the statutory provisions governing suspensions of the power of alienation, in view of L. beyond the statutory period[74] is void if the alienability or ownership of the property is suspended in the interim.[75]

[§ 145] b. To Corporations To Be Formed. In jurisdictions in which charitable trusts presently commencing are held not to be subject to statutes relating to suspensions of alienability and ownership,[76] a gift of property upon trusts to form a charitable corporation and to transfer or convey the property thereto, without any gift of a beneficial interest in the trust pending the formation of such corporation, is not invalidated by the possibility that the corporation may not be formed within the statutory period,[77] the gift being regarded as immediate to charity.[78]

Where charitable trusts are subject to the statute,[79] however, such a gift in trust for the formation of a corporation it valid only if by its terms the corporation must necessarily be formed, if at all, and take the property within the statutory period;[80] and if the time for the formation of the corporation is not so restricted the gift is void.[81]

In General. While it has been said that the construction of a limitation must be made without reference to statutes relating to suspension of alienability or ownership or postponement of vesting, and to the instrument as so construed the statutes then applied,[83] the tendency of the courts has been toward a liberal construction with reference to the statute,[84] and it has become the established rule that, where two constructions are possible, under one of which the limitation would be valid and under the other it would offend against the statute, the former will be adopted.[85] But it is only where there is clearly room for two constructions that the court may adopt one

[a] The general principle that a will should be construed so as to give effect to its limitations (1) rather than to render them illegal, when two constructions are possible, applies to construction with reference to the statute against suspension. Bullard v. Albion, 128 Misc. 292, 217 NYS 849. (2) Generally see Charities § 12; Deeds § 200; Trusts [39 Cyc 194]; Ut Res Magis Valeat Quam Pereat [39 Cyc 1100]; Wills [40 Cyc 1407 et seq].

[b] Rule applied.—(1) Where a will gave property in trust for a designated person, and directed that it be invested "for his benefit during his natural life and for the benefit of his wife and his issue after his death," it will be construed to give a life estate to such person with remainder to his wife and issue, rather than to direct a trust to continue during the lives of his wife and children, contrary to the statute relating to suspension of the power of alienation. Mee v. Gordan, 187 N. Y. 400, 80 NE 353, 116 AmSR 613, 10 Ann Cas 172. (2) Where a will provided for an accounting by the trustees within two years after the expiration of the second measuring life, another trust to continue until the time fixed for such accounting is not invalid, as unduly suspending the power of alienation, as it should be construed to continue until the beginning of the two-year period, the will not requiring that the accounting be postponed for two years but only allowing that much time for the trustees to prepare the account. Nester v. Nester, 68 Misc. 207, 118 NYS 1009, 124 NYS 974. (3) Where a trust of his residuary estate created by one having a power of appointment would, if construed as executing such power, result in an illegal suspension, it has been held not to be an execution of the power, but to apply only to the testator's own property. Duff v. Rodenkirchen, 110 Misc. 575, 182 NYS 35 [aff 193 App. Div. 898 mem, 183 NYS 947 mem]. (4) Where the testator's father had given him seventy-one shares of certain stock for life, with power of appointment, and his mother had given him five hundred and twenty-seven shares of the same stock for life, with power of appointment, and the testator gave half his entire property in trust for his wife for life, and half in trust for his daughter for life, with remainders over, without specifying to which beneficiary the property appointed under each power should go, the will is construed as giving to the daughter who was not in being at the creation of the testator's father's power, but was in being at the creation of testator's mother's power, the stock, up to the amount of her share, which the testator had received from his mother, and as giving to his wife the balance of such stock and the stock received from the testator's father, thus avoiding a violation of the statute and consequent illegality of the trust for the daughter if the contrary construction were adopted. Cheever v. Cheever, 172 App. Div. 353, 157 NYS 428. (5) Where an executor was directed to sell property, "but not less than two years after my death," and to distribute the proceeds, the limitation of the power of sale should be treated as directory merely, and not as of the essence of the power itself, and consequently the will is valid. Matter of Fitzsimmons, 114 Misc. 71, 186 NYS 664. (6) A devise to the "issue" of a

to preserve rather than to overturn the limitation,[86] and it is not at liberty to read into a limitation provisions which would save it, on the ground that the creator was ignorant of its illegality,[87] or make a construction which amounts to rewriting the limitation for the purpose of evading the application of the statute.[88]

[§ 147] b. Presumption of Legality. In accordance with the general principle that a construction rendering an instrument valid is preferred to one making it violative of the statute,[89] the court will not assume, in the absence of proof, that the state of facts existing at the time of the creation of a limitation was such as to render the limitation invalid.[90]

[§ 148] c. Severance of Invalid Limitations—(1) In General. In accordance with the general principle that a construction rendering an instrument valid is preferred to one making it violative of the statute,[91] where a limitation or other provision is void for offending against statutory restrictions upon suspension of alienability or ownership or postponement of vesting, it may be severed from provisions and limitations otherwise valid, and effect given to the latter, if that may be done without destroying the scheme of distribution contemplated by the creator of the limitations;[92] but where the excision of a void provision defeats his primary pur-designated person as joint tenants when the youngest should become twenty-one years old is properly construed as a valid devise to issue in being at the testator's death and not as including afterborn children where the latter construction would render the clause void as an illegal suspension of the power of alienation. Seitz v. Faversham, 205 N. Y. 197, 98 NE 385. (7) A devise of property to one for life, at his death "to be equally divided between" two others, with remainder in fee "at their death," does not violate the statute against perpetuities; "a fair interpretation of the devise is that one life estate is devised to both . . . to be enjoyed by them in common. In other words an undivided one-half to each." Woolfitt v. Preston, 203 Mich. 502, 169 NW 838, 840. (8) A testamentary provision directing trustees to distribute the estate "upon the death of my said wife and daughter and after the payment of all my said debts" does not suspend the power of alienation for a longer period than during the continuance of two lives; the statute requires the payment of debts of a decedent, and this will should not be construed to create a trust for that purpose, which might continue after the deaths of the testator's wife and daughter. McGraw v. McGraw, 176 Fed. 312, 316, 99 CCA 650 (construing Michigan statute); In re Rider, 199 Cal. 724, 251 P 799; Fitz Gerald v. Big Rapids, 123 Mich. 281, 82 NW 56 (both to same effect). (9) A provision, in an assignment of property to persons as joint tenants, that neither should have power to affect the right of the survivor, must be construed either as an idle promise or as an agreement not to exercise the power of severing the joint tenancy, and not as a restraint on alienation, where the latter construction would render it void. [a] Excessive number of class below age specified.—Where property was given in trust to pay the income to the testator's nieces and nephews until the youngest survivor of them should arrive at the age of thirty years, the fact that there was no proof as to the ages of the beneficiaries at the testator's death, and that none of them might then have been under thirty years of age, is a conclusive answer to the contention that by such provision the alienability and ownership might be suspended for five lives. Matteson v. Palser, 173 N. Y. 404, 66 NE 110. To same effect Coston v. Coston, 118 App. Div. 1, 103 NYS 307.

[b] Adulthood of beneficiaries of accumulation.—Where accumulation for the benefit of designated persons was directed, the court will not assume that such persons were adults rather than minors, and thereupon declare the trust for accumulation to be invalid. [b] Remainders.—(1) Where a valid trust provision was followed by an invalid remainder to the children of the beneficiaries, such remainder is severable and may be cut off to save the primary dispositions of the will., Matter of Erickson, 113 Misc. 10, 183 NYS 779 [aff 198 App. Div. 999 mem, 190 NYS 923 mem]. (2) Where the testator gave an estate for life to his daughter, with remainder to her children when they should reach the age of twenty-five, which remainder was void, the trust for the daughter is good. In re Chittick, 243 N. Y. 304, 153 NE 83. (3) Where a life tenant with power of appointment created a trust to pay the income to his widow who was in being at the creation of the power, until the child, who was born after such creation, should reach a designated age, when the corpus should be paid to him, the interest of the widow is not to be defeated by the invalidity of the remainder to the child, the good provision being separable from the bad. Matter of Bankers' Trust Co., 82 Misc. 375, 143 NYS 843, 11 Mills Surr. 234. (4) A limitation of successive life estates to the testator's son and daughter is not invalidated by the attempted limitation of a succeeding life estate to his grandchildren, with remainder over. Rozell v. Rozell, 217 Mich. 324, 186 NW 489.

[c] Conditional limitation over.—Where property was given absolutely to a designated person, with a provision for divesting of title and remainder over upon a contingency which would create an illegal suspension, the illegal remainder will be disregarded but the first gift and the divesting provision are not thereby invalidated, under the rule that invalid provisions may be eliminated and valid portions sustained where the general scheme can thereby be preserved. Matter of Phillips, 56 Misc. 96, 107 NYS 388, 6 Mills Surr. 241.

[d] Trusts.—(1) Where a will created an invalid trust which was intended merely to postpone payment of legacies for an illegal period, the trust provision could be expunged without destroying the general scheme and purpose, and such legacies were valid. In re Hitchcock, 222 N. Y. 57, 118 NE 220. (2) Where a valid testamentary trust for two lives was subsequently extended by a codicil so as to include another life, the provision for the third life will be excised, leaving the original scheme intact, within the rule that invalid limitations will be cut out when it can be done without in any manner interfering with the general scheme of disposition. Matter of Abbey, 131 App. Div. 395, 168 NYS 1047 [aff 98 Misc. 506, 164 NYS 934]. (3) Where a life tenant with power of appointment appointed property to be paid to a designated person in installments, with a direction that in the event of such person's death be-pose or destroys the scheme of distribution the other limitations will fail also.[93]

[§ 149] (2) Alternative Contingencies. Under the general rules relating to the separation of valid limitations from those which are invalid,[94] where interests or estates are limited upon alternative contingencies, under one of which the limitation would be good and under the other it would violate a statute relating to suspension or postponement, the valid provision is separable from the invalid, and does not fail by reason of the latter's invalidity;[95] but only when the creator himself has limited interests in fore all the property had been paid to her then the balance remaining should be given in trust for the life of a third person, the invalidity of the trust for such third person is not communicated to the other provisions, and the appointment to the first person designated is valid. Matter of Lang, 72 Misc. 589, 131 NYS 991. (4) Where a will established trusts for designated persons and provided that, in case the testator's estate should be worth more than estimated or in case any beneficiaries should die, the amounts given to the survivors should be proportionately increased, with remainder over on the death of the last beneficiary, the invalidity of the ulterior limitation did not invalidate the entire trust, but effect may be given thereto for the first two lives and thereafter the trust ceases and the property passes as intestate property. Matter of Aucaigne, 131 Misc. 723, 228 NYS 234. (5) A trust for the life of one in being at its creation, and for each of her children attaining the age of twenty-one years, while void as to the children who may not have been in being at the creation of the trust, is valid as to the life tenant, the trust for such life tenant being readily separable from the ulterior limitations. In re Wilcox, 194 N. Y. 288, 87 NE 497. (6) Under a trust to pay monthly sums to each sister during life and after her death to her heirs for their lives, the provisions for the heirs being void, the trust in favor of each sister is entirely independent of the provision for her heirs, and does not depend upon the validity of the disposition made of what remained of the fund after her death. Matter of Trumble, 137 App. Div. 483, 122 NYS 763 [mod on other grounds 199 N. Y. 454, 92 NE 1073]. (7) Where a trust to continue during the lives of the testator's two sons provided for the payment out of the income of annual sums to any after-born child of the testator during his minority, the provision for such after-born child will be upheld during the two measuring lives, although it is void as to the period after their expiration because attempting to suspend alienation for more than two lives in being. Nester v. Nester, 68 Misc. 207, 118 NYS 1009, 124 NYS 974. (8) Where a testator gave property in trust to pay fifty dollars out of the income to his daughter for her life, and the balance of the income to his widow for life and then to his son for life, with remainder over, the trust is good as to the share of income given to the widow and son, although it is invalid as to the portion given the daughter, which might continue for her life and then for the lives of the widow and son, and as to which the trust would exceed the statutory period. In re Gallien, 247 N. Y. 195, 160 NE 8. (9) Where property is given in trust for the life of the beneficiary, and after her death to be held in trust until the expiration of a period measured by two other lives, the life estate is not invalidated, but that part of the trust to continue after the death of the life tenant and until the expiration of the designated period should be cut off as invalid. Nester v. Nester, supra. (10) A trust to pay the income to the testator's widow for life and after her death to three designated persons or the survivor of them for life, while void as to such three persons, is valid as to the widow. Matter of Ely, 130 Misc. 345, 224 NYS 446. (11) A trust to pay the income to a husband for life and after his death to his wife, and after the death of the husband and wife to pay one half of the income to each of the daughters, is void as to the daughters, involving an illegal suspension of absolute ownership for more than two lives in being; but such invalidity does not affect the primary purpose of the trust, which was to maintain the family prior to the parents' deaths, and the trusts as to the husband and wife are valid. Carrier v. Carrier, 226 N. Y. 114, 123 NE 135. (12) Under a trust for the widow for life, the income then to be divided equally among the testator's children, with remainder to the children of a child dying, provided if a child should die without leaving children his share should go to the survivors for life, it is held that if one of the children dies leaving no child the provision for a further life estate to the surviving children violates the statute and cannot be sustained, but the effect would only be to destroy the trust beyond the second life. In re Silsby, 229 N. Y. 396, 128 NE 212; Church v. Wilson, 152 App. Div. 844, 137 NYS 1002 [aff 209 N. Y. 553 mem, 103 NE 1122 mem].

[e] A provision for accumulation to pay encumbrances may be cut out of a will where so doing will not wholly defeat the testator's intention, the only effect being that the beneficiaries will not be entitled to receive the whole net income from the beginning. Appell v. Appell, 177 App. Div. 570, 164 NYS 246 [aff 221 N. Y. 602 mem, 117 NE 1060 mem].

[f] Independent provisions.—(1) Where a will creates one or more invalid trusts and one or more valid and independent lawful trusts, not forming an essential part of the will as a whole, the invalid provisions may be annulled and the valid ones sustained. Davis v. MacMahon, 161 App. Div. 458, 146 NYS 657, 13 Mills Surr. 33 [aff 214 N. Y. 614 mem, 108 NE 1092 mem]. To same effect In re Mount, 185 N. Y. 162, 77 NE 999; Matter of Bankers' Trust Co., 82 Misc. 375, 143 NYS 843, 11 Mills Surr. 234. (2) Where separate trusts were created for such children of a designated person as should be living at a specified future time, the fact that among the children then living might be some born after the creation of the estate did not render the entire trust void, although the shares of such after-born children would be void; and where at the arrival of the time specified the only children living were those who were in being at the creation of the estate, the trust for each was valid. Mount v. Mount, 196 App. Div. 508, 188 NYS 170 [mod 108 Misc. 156, 178 NYS 168, and aff 234 N. Y. 568 mem, 138 NE 449 mem].

[g] "The line of cleavage thus drawn between what is to be kept and what destroyed, does not divide a mere continuum and split into parts a gift essentially unbroken. . . . It is not arbitrarily interjected by the court at a point where the testator had no thought of a resting place, a pause, a stage upon the journey. It follows seams and contacts suggested by the will itself. . . . We go along with the testator as far forward as we may." In re Horner, 237 N. Y. 489, 499, 143 NE 655.

[a] "The rule is (1) that if on a particular contingency the power of alienation is so suspended that it may possibly exceed the limits prescribed by law, the estate granted on that particular contingency is void; but this defect, which would affect the estate only if that contingency had occurred, can have no effect on it if that contingency does not occur; then that unlawful estate is not attempted. Accordingly, the good alternative estate is sustained notwithstanding the defect which would have been in the other, if the course of events had created it." Fowler v. Depau, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 224, 236. (2) "But for the prohibition of the statute, both dispositions would have been lawful and valid, and either would have taken effect according to the happening of the events giving it vitality. The statute comes in and avoids one of the dispositions, leaving the other unaffected by its provisions. Why should not the latter take effect upon the occurrence of the events, upon which it was made to depend? The authorities sustain its validity. . . . Where a limitation is made to take effect on two alternative events, one of which is too remote and the other valid as within the prescribed limits, although the gift is void so far as it depends on the remote event, it will be allowed to take effect on the happening of the alternative one." Schettler v. Smith, 41 N. Y. 328, 336. (3) "Where the instrument provides for a future disposition of property, the alternative can a contingency which would cause a violation of the statute be disregarded,[96] and where a gift depends upon a twofold event constituting but one contingency, the limitation cannot be split by the court into two contingencies, one good and one bad, and the limitation sustained where the good contingency has happened.[97]

[§ 150] d. Separation of Shares in Trust.[98] In accordance with the general principle that a construction rendering an instrument valid is preferred to one making it violative of the statute,[99] where a trust for the benefit of two or more persons, by the existence of which the alienability or ownership of the trust property is suspended,[1] is to cease as to each beneficiary at a time or upon a contingency specified by its terms, and his share of the corpus will thereupon be freed from the trust, the limitation is ordinarily construed as creating a separate trust for each beneficiary,[2] and the statutory period is accordingly to be separately computed as to each by making alternative limitations, one or the other of which is to take effect according to the happening of specified alternative contingencies, the mere fact that the limitation over upon one contingency is invalid because it might involve undue suspension, or postponement of vesting, does not invalidate the other limitation which, if the contingency upon which it would become operative should occur, could not possibly occasion such undue suspension or postponement." Church v. Wilson, 152 App. Div. 844, 137 NYS 1002, 1006, 1007 [aff 209 N. Y. 553 mem, 103 NE 1122 mem, and quot Chaplin Suspension of Alien. (2d ed) §§ 430, 432]. (4) "And in such cases also, if the disposition of the precedent estate is so far separable as to be valid in any event, irrespective of which contingency may occur in future, then it may be sustained, and the determination of the validity of the future dispositions may be deferred, within the limits of the statutory period, until the events occur upon which the decision as to them must be based." Church v. Wilson, supra.

[b] Thus an alternative provision of a will, creating a contingent estate which would be invalid because absolute ownership might be suspended for four lives, does not invalidate the entire limitation where the contingency never occurred and the property actually became vested under a valid provision. [a] Rule applied.—(1) Where a trust for the benefit of six children by its terms ceases as to one sixth of the property on the death of each child, the trusts are separable and the statutory period is not exceeded. Fischer v. Langlotz, 114 App. Div. 903, 100 NYS 578. (2) A trust for several persons for their lives, to be distributed after the death "respectively" of all of such persons, denotes separation or segregation of the trust property into separate trusts, especially where the opposite construction would cause a violation of the statute against perpetuities. Matter of U. S. Trust Co., 86 Misc. 603, 148 NYS 762 [aff 166 App. Div. 920 mem, 152 NYS 1147 mem]. (3) Where a trust was created to pay income to testator's wife for life and then to his two sons in equal shares, and on the death of either to pay over one half of the corpus, the will is construed as creating two separate trusts and there is no illegal suspension of ownership. Post v. Bruere, 127 App. Div. 250, 111 NYS 51. (4) Where testator gave property in trust to pay one third of the income to each of three beneficiaries, and upon the death of the first to pay the income equally to the survivors, and upon the death of the second to divide the estate into equal parts and to pay one half to remaindermen and the other half to survivor of the three original beneficiaries with remainder at his death, the will contemplated a severance of the property into three independent trusts, the principals of each being simply held together for purposes of investment, and consequently the power of alienation was not suspended for more than two lives. In re Buttner, 243 N. Y. 1, 152 NE 447. (5) A trust to hold for the benefit of four persons until they respectively attain twenty-one years of age, when one fourth of the principal and accumulations should be paid over to each as he arrives at such age, is to be construed as creating four separate trusts, inasmuch as the principal of each trust fund is released from the trust provisions upon the beneficiary attaining the designated age, and consequently no illegal suspension is caused. Markert v. Solomon, 217 App. Div. 275, 216 NYS 626. (6) Under a will directing that one fourth of the income from a trust fund be paid to each of four persons for their lives, with remainder "after their deaths," the specification that each is to have one fourth only, without any attempt, upon the death of one, to give his one fourth of the income to the survivors, makes it clear that four equal separate trusts were intended to be created, the trust as to each beneficiary terminating upon his death, and consequently there was no illegal suspension. Matter of McGeehan, 200 App. Div. 739, 193 NYS 856 [aff 115 Misc. 737, 187 NYS 823, and aff 237 N. Y. 575 mem, 143 NE 748 mem]. (7) A trust for three persons, providing upon the death of any one for the payment of his share to a remainderman, is to be construed as though in terms it had created a separate trust for each beneficiary. Cushman v. Cushman, 116 App. Div. 763, 102 NYS 258 [aff 191 N. Y. 505 mem, 84 NE 1112 mem]. (8) Where property is given in trust to be divided into shares for separate and distinct beneficiaries, at the death of each of whom his share of the principal is released, each share must be regarded as a separate trust to be measured by its own term. Pryer v. Pryer, 145 App. Div. 928 mem, 126 NYS 393, 130 NYS 1126 mem. (9) Under a trust directing that one third of the income shall be paid to each of testator's sons during the period of his life, and, upon the death of one, one third of the principal to be given to his issue, or if he leave no issue to the surviving sons, to be applied to the principal of their shares, three separate and distinct trusts will be considered to have been created, although the fund has not been in express terms separated into three parts. Matter of Fidelity Trust Co., 94 Misc. 533, 160 NYS 193. (10) A trust to pay over a sum of money to each grandchild attaining twenty-one years of age suggests separate trusts, and they will be severed. In re Colegrove, 221 N. Y. 455, 117 NE 813.

[b] Termination of trust as to each share and liberation of principal.—(1) It is necessary, for the purpose of holding that separate and independent trusts are created for each of two or more persons, that each part of the principal fund shall be liberated from the trust upon the termination of the beneficial interest of each cestui. Leach v. Godwin, 198 N. Y. 35, 91 NE 288; Matter of Magnus, 179 App. Div. 359, 166 NYS 497. (2) The fact that a trust for the benefit of four persons is to terminate as to each beneficiary at his share of the trust property;[3] and while an intention to create separate and independent trusts must be found within the instrument,[4] it does not militate against such construction that no direction for separation of the trust property is expressed,[5] or that the trust property is in the meantime to be held in solido or in a common fund for purposes of administration or investment.[6] But if a contrary intention appears, the trust cannot be construed to be separable,[7] and the statutory period must be computed with reference to the possible ultimate duration of the whole trust.[8]

[§ 151] e. Shares Accruing by Survivorship. In accordance with the general principle that a construction rendering an instrument valid is preferred to one making it violative of the statute,[9] where an interest or estate in property is limited to a class of individuals, with limitations over to the survivors upon the death of each member, it is held, unless a contrary intention appears,[10] that shares accruing to survivors at a death do not again go over at a second death.[11]

[§ 152] f. Particular Provisions—(1) Youngest Surviving Child. In accordance with the general principle that a construction rendering an instrument valid is preferred to one making it violative of the statute,[12] a suspension or postponement to continue until the attainment of a specified age by the youngest child of the creator of the limitation, or of another designated person, is construed to refer to the youngest child surviving at the creation of the limitation, and not the youngest surviving to attain the specified age,[13] except when a contrary intention appears.[14]

death, and that the property does not then go into or remain a part of the general fund but is given over absolutely, is alone sufficient to show that a separate trust was intended for each beneficiary, although no express separation or division is made and the creator contemplated control of the property as an entirety in one fund so long as practicable. [a] Rule applied.—(1) Where property is given in trust for five beneficiaries for life, and it is provided that the share of one dying shall be divided between the survivors on the same trust, the will will not be construed as providing for the passage, upon the death of the second child, of a subshare received from the share of the first child dying, and as to such subshare the testator died intestate. Chastain v. Tilford, 138 App. Div. 746, 123 NYS 513 [aff 201 N. Y. 538, 94 NE 646]. (2) Where a testator created separate trusts for each of his five children, to pay the income of each such trust to them and to pay the principal to each child upon attaining the age of thirty, and provided that if any child died before attaining such age a new trust should be created of his share, to be divided into four equal parts and held for each of the four other children for the same uses and subject to the same conditions as their original one-fifth shares, such provision is not to be construed as creating an illegal suspension on the theory that if a second child died leaving no issue the fund would go to the remaining three children, with similar results upon the death of each of them without issue, so that the power of alienation might be suspended until the death of the last child; but it is to be construed so that, upon the death of a child who has received one fourth of the share of a deceased child, such one fourth shall not be distributed to the survivors. The testator "should not be convicted of having formulated an unlawful scheme in the attempted disposition of his property, if such conclusion properly can be avoided." Schey v. Schey, 194 N. [a] Rule applied.—(1) A trust to continue "until the youngest of my children shall have attained the age of twenty-one years" is not to be construed as meaning the youngest of the children who shall live that long, but the youngest of the children living at the testator's death. [§ 153] (2) Until Specified Time or Attainment of Specified Age. In accordance with the general principle that a construction rendering an instrument valid is preferred to one making it violative of the statute,[15] a suspension of alienability or ownership or a postponement of vesting to continue until the attainment by a designated person of his majority or other specified age,[16] or a trust for the benefit of a designated person to continue for a fixed term[17] or until the happening of a specified event[18] or for a period measured by the lives of others than the beneficiary,[19] is construed as terminating at the time fixed by its terms or at the earlier death of such person, whichever shall first occur, except when a contrary intention appears.[20]

[§ 154] 9. Other Statutory Restrictions upon Future Estates[21]—a. In General. In addition to the rules relating to suspension of alienability[22] and ownership,[23] and to postponement of vesting,[24] the creation of future interests and estates is, in New York and in a number of the jurisdictions which have copied or imitated its system,[25] made subject to other statutory restrictions,[26] which, although they have been said to have no necessary connection with the law of perpetuities,[27] are so closely related thereto that they may properly be considered trust for four children, to continue until all have reached their majority, cannot be construed as intending a trust to be measured by the life of the youngest child, within his minority, since a contrary contention—the continuance of the trust as to the survivor, notwithstanding the earlier death of one—is made manifest by the words employed. Whitefield v. Crissman, 55 Misc. 468, 106 NYS 630 [aff 123 App. Div. 233, 108 NYS 110].

"A term measured by a minority ends upon the death of the minor." Jacoby v. Jacoby, 188 N. Y. 124, 129, 80 NE 676.

[a] Reason for rule.—A trust for the benefit of a beneficiary to continue until he arrives at a designated age manifestly is conditional upon his arriving at that age and terminates at his death before it, under the rule that where the purpose of a trust ceases, the estate of the trustee ceases also, and that a trust terminates when there ceases to be a beneficiary capable of calling for its enforcement. Pruyn v. Sears, 96 Misc. 200, 161 NYS 58.

[b] Rule applied.—A trust to terminate as soon after the death or remarriage of a testator's widow as the youngest child then living should attain twenty-one years of age does not violate the statute, since the longest period of suspension would be the lifetime of the wife and the lifetime or minority of the youngest child living at the death of the wife. Matter of Bahrenburg, 130 Misc. 196, 224 NYS 183 [aff 214 App. Div. 792, 210 NYS 824 (aff 244 N. Y. 561 mem, 155 NE 897 mem)].

Compare Hause v. O'Leary, 136 Minn. 126, 161 NW 392 (where a prohibition of alienation by the devisee of property for a period of five years was held to be personal to him and so to terminate in case of his death before the expiration of such period); Tonnele v. Wetmore, 124 App. Div. 686, 109 NYS 349 [motion to dism app den 192 N. Y. 583 mem, 85 NE 1116 mem, and rev on other grounds 195 N. Y. 436, 88 NE 1068] (holding that a provision that trustees should have power to retain the trust property in their hands without selling it until a certain date, coupled with a power to sell it thereafter, was intended to be conditioned upon the trust continuing until that date, and did not extend the estate devised to the trustees).

[a] Rule applied.—(1) A trust for the benefit of a designated person in being, to continue ten years, with no remainder over, in trust, is construed as terminating at the earlier death of the beneficiary. Hillyer v. Vandewarter, 121 N. Y. 681, 24 NE 999. (2) Where trustees were directed to hold property for five years and pay the income to a designated person in being, and to convey the corpus to him at the end of such time, with legal remainder over in case of his death before five years should have elapsed, the trust must cease upon the death of the beneficiary, if it should occur before the end of five years, and consequently the power of alienation is not illegally suspended. Keenan v. Keenan, 122 App. Div. 435, 107 NYS 152. (3) A trust to pay the income to the testator's wife for the term of five years from his death must be construed as intending that the term should fall within her life, and if she dies before its expiration, the trust as to payment of income ceases, especially since there would be no beneficiary of the income; and consequently the trust does not violate the statute. [§ 155] b. Successive Life Estates. Under a statute providing that successive estates for life may not be limited except to persons in being at the creation thereof,[29] a limitation to a class which may include persons subsequently born,[30] or an appointment to persons not in esse at the creation of the power,[31] is void. And under a statute providing that, where a remainder is limited on more than two successive life estates, the life estates subsequent to those of the two persons first entitled thereto are void,[32] cross remainders for life to the survivors of three or more life tenants are void as to a share which accrued to one life tenant upon the death of another.[33] In such case it is ordinarily provided[34] that on the death of the two persons first entitled[35] the remainder takes effect in the same manner as if no attempt had been made to create further life estates;[36] thus, if the remainder is still contingent at the termination of the first two life estates it fails,[37] and if it is then vested or ready to vest it is accelerated and takes effect at once.[38] Such statutory provisions, when not otherwise restricted, apply to limitations of legal estates both in realty and in personalty,[39] but have no application to beneficial interests in trusts.[40]

Sutton, 233 Mich. 249, 206 NW 366 (where a devise to testator's widow and three sons, providing that at the death of any of them the survivors should enjoy the whole property until their death, with remainder over at the death of the last survivor, was said to create a joint estate and not cross remainders nor successive estates; but the court did not advert to the statute).

[a] Rule applied.—(1) Where property was devised to A and B for life, as tenants in common, with cross remainders for life, and on the death of the survivor to C for life, with remainder in fee, three successive life estates were attempted to be created in the share of the tenant in common first dying, and accordingly the life estate of C was void as to such share, although valid as to the share of the tenant in common dying second. Purdy v. Hayt, 92 N. Y. 446; In re Conger, 81 App. Div. 493, 80 NYS 933. (2) Where land was limited to one for life with power of appointment, and the donee appointed to her husband and three daughters for life, with cross remainders for life, "the case is . . . presented, where three-fourths of the life estate devised is void under the statute whilst the other one-fourth may be valid, but it cannot be determined which is valid or which condemned until after the death of three of the life tenants. The person being unknown and the claim contingent, we incline to the view that this is also within the condemnation of the statute [relating to suspension]." Dana v. Murray, 122 N. Y. 604, 618, 26 NE 21.

34. See statutory provisions.

35. See cases infra this note; and note 36.

[a] Two persons first entitled.—(1) The statute providing that all life estates subsequent to those of the two persons first entitled thereto shall be void does not limit the manner in which the two life tenants that may take shall be determined, and that determination may be left to the contingency of which taker shall first die. Vandenburgh v. Vandenburgh, 85 Misc. 131, 147 NYS 244, 11 Mills Surr. 561. (2) Thus, under a will giving equal life interests in property to five children with remainders to the survivors, and remainder to testator's grandchildren upon the death of the last surviving child, upon the death of the first child the surviving four children took an additional estate for life in that share of the property of which decedent had been life tenant, but upon the death of the second child the remainder to the grandchildren took effect as to that portion of the estate which had been included in the share of the first child dying. [a] Remainder to a class.—Where successive life estates were limited to testator's widow, daughter and son, with remainder to the son's children, only the first two life estates will be given effect, but the remainder is not avoided, the only result being that the class is to be ascertained at the daughter's death instead of at the death of the son. [a] Successive cestuis not in being.—Where a testator devised property in trust for the benefit of his children and their issue, for a term duly limited upon lives in being, successive life estates to persons not in being were not created, although it is true that the beneficial interest of a cestui would terminate with its life, and that the issue would succeed to the same interest if the parent died during the trust term, and that in the nature of things the issue could enjoy the benefits only during life also; but such a limitation does not create a life estate in the property to which it relates and the statute is inapplicable. Gilman v. Reddington, 24 N. Y. 9.

[b] Where a trust is limited upon more than two lives, the lives in excess of two cannot be dropped out, so as to avoid an illegal suspension. Shipman v. Rollins, 98 N. Y. 311, 15 AbbNCas 288.

[c] Legal life estate and trust for two lives.—(1) A limitation of a legal life estate, with remainder in trust for a term measured by two lives, did not offend the statutory restriction as to successive life estates, because the legal estate of the trustees in the remainder is a single estate and not two life estates, although measured by two lives. Matter of Hurlbut, 51 Misc. 263, 100 NYS 1098, 5 Mills Surr. 464. (2) Where a donor gave property in trust to pay the income to his wife for life and then to his son for life, and to distribute the corpus as his son might by will direct, a testamentary gift by the son to his widow for her life with remainder to his brother in fee is not rendered invalid by Real Prop. L. § 43 prohibiting more than two successive life estates, such section applying only to legal life estates and not to trusts. U. S. Trust Co. v. Webb, 110 Misc. 683, 181 NYS 850.

eral or as to estates pur autre vie,[41] that no remainder may be created thereon except a remainder in fee, or, in case of such a life estate in a term of years, no remainder except for the whole residue of such term,[42] a remainder for life on such an estate is void.[43] And under a statute providing that, when a remainder is created on any such life estate which is dependent on more than two lives, it shall take effect on the death of the two persons first named,[44] the remainder vests at the end of such first two lives, if the remaindermen are then in being and ascertainable, in the same manner as though no succeeding life estates were intended to be created.[45] Such statutory provisions, when not otherwise restricted, are applicable to personal property as well as to real estate.[46]

[§ 157] d. Remainders for Life on Terms of Years. Where so provided by statute,[47] no estate for life may be limited as a remainder on a term of years except to a person in being at the creation thereof.[48]

XI. CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITIONS OF PERPETUITIES

[§ 158] A. In General. In a number of jurisdictions perpetuities are prohibited by express constitutional provisions[49] which are construed to refer to perpetuities as they are defined and exist at common law.[50]

[§ 159] B. Effect upon Charitable Trusts. Where an exception is made as to perpetuities for eleemosynary purposes, charitable trusts are not within a constitutional prohibition of perpetuities;[51] and even in the absence of any exception trusts for charitable purposes are ordinarily held not to be prohibited by such provisions.[52]

XII. UNDER CIVIL LAW[53]

[§ 160] A. In General. While it would appear that the civil law, as contradistinguished from the common law, comprehends no rule analogous to the rule against perpetuities,[54] statutes, sometimes referred to as statutes against perpetuities,[55] forbidding the creation of certain interests and estates and restricting the persons who may receive donations of property, have a purpose similar to that of the common-law rule,[56] and accordingly may properly be considered in this treatise.[57]

[a] The effect of the statute as well as its language is to terminate the suspension at the end of the first two lives, in the same manner as though no succeeding life estates were intended to be created. Bailey v. Bailey, 28 Hun 603 [mod on other grounds 97 N. Y. 460].

We are at a loss to comprehend the force of the objection, and do not appreciate its logic. It is a sufficient reply that the convention which ordained that declaration . . . [is] to be presumed to have understood the full import of the term used"); Griffin v. Graham, 8 N. C. 96, 130, 9 AmD 619 ("The meaning which the Law annexes to this term [perpetuities], is that of an estate tail so settled that it cannot be undone or made void. As when, if all the parties who have interest, join, they cannot bar or pass the estate; but if by the concurrence of all having the estate tail, it may be barred, it is not a perpetuity. It is in reference to estates tail, that the word is used in the Bill of Rights; for there was no other estate that had a tendency that way"); Morris v. Fisher, 8 Pa. Dist. 161, 163 ("The 37th section of the constitution of 1776 provided that 'the future legislature of this State shall regulate intails in such a manner as to prevent perpetuities.' This was merely a declaration of the principles that had prevailed in Pennsylvania since the founding of the colony. . . . With us, in Pennsylvania, the word perpetuities is used in its largest sense, including as well interests or estates that are inalienable or indestructible, as those which are bad for remoteness"); Gortario v. Cantu, 7 Tex. 35, 46 ("It must be remembered that at the adoption of this Constitution the laws of Spain were the common law of the land. Now, if we explore the jurisprudence of Spain and Mexico to ascertain the meaning which must be affixed to those terms, we shall find that the prohibitions of the Constitution are but a repetition of the inhibitions against every species of restriction on the transferability of property as contained in the decrees which we have already examined. If we look to the laws of England and to the usual signification of the terms as understood and applied in that system, the range and extent of these prohibitions will be very much limited. It is not necessary to the decision of this case that a definite construction be given to the language employed. This can be done when the question is fairly presented and is elaborated in the argument of counsel. If the terms of the Constitution be construed in the sense in which they would be understood by a Spanish jurist, then the prohibitions against restraints on the disposition of property will have been continued long after our former system of laws was swept out of existence").

"The Constitution does not define perpetuities, and we must look to the common law for the proper meaning of the term." Eager v. McCoy, 143 Tenn. 693, 703, 228 SW 709.

Purpose and reason of rule against perpetuities see supra § 2.

57. See infra §§ 161–164.

[§ 161] B. Substitutions[58] and Fidei Commissa.[59] Under a statute abolishing substitutions and fidei commissa,[60] a gift to one, subject to a donation of an imperfect ownership[61] to another, to take effect upon the latter's death,[62] or upon his death before attaining his majority[63] or without leaving issue him surviving,[64] or at another fixed or determinable time,[65] is void, and the whole limitation fails;[66] and, likewise, a limitation in trust,[67] even though for charitable purposes,[68] is void and deemed as not written; but precatory provisions following an absolute gift do not invalidate the gift,[69] and a mere charge upon property given is valid.[70] For a single life,[71] however, the usufruct of property may be given to one and the naked ownership to another,[72] even where the usufructuary is given the further right to consume the corpus,[73] and the gift of the usufruct may be upon a condition;[74] but the donor cannot reserve the usufruct to himself.[75] Where a statute permits donations to be made in trust and exempts them from the general prohibition of substitutions and fidei commissa,[76] a direction that a bequest be paid to the legatee only upon his attaining his majority is valid;[77] and failure to name an executor expressly as trustee is immaterial where trust duties are imposed upon him.[78]

Agreement or estoppel of parties. The prohibition of substitutions and fidei commissa being a rule of public order,[79] such gifts cannot be created or maintained either by the conventions of the parties[80] or by estoppel or pleas of estoppel.[81]

Construction of donation or will. Substitutions and fidei commissa are never to be presumed,[82] but must either be expressed[83] or result clearly from the sense and signification of the terms of an instrument;[84] and in case of doubt the gift should be maintained.[85]

[§ 162] C. Vulgar Substitutions. A gift may be made to a succession of donees, each to take in case of the death or default of the other before the falling of the gift, without violating a statute prohibiting substitutions.[86]

[§ 163] D. Right of Return to Donor. Under a statute authorizing a stipulation that property given by donation or will shall return to the donor in case he survives the donee, or the donee and his descendants,[87] such a reservation may be made only in favor of the donor;[88] but a stipulation for return to the donor "and his heirs" is not objectionable where no substitution is in fact intended.[89]

[§ 164] E. Donees Not in Being. Under a statute providing that, in order to be capable of receiving by donation or will, it suffices to be conceived at the time of the donation or decease respectively,[90] children conceived after such time can take nothing by the gift.[91]

XIII. WHAT LAW GOVERNS

[§ 165] A. Laws in Force at Different Times. The validity of a limitation of an interest or estate in property under the rule against perpetuities or statutory changes therein or modifications thereof is governed by the law as it exists at the creation of such interest or estate, without regard to laws theretofore or thereafter in force;[92] so, in the case of limitations made by will, the law in effect at the death of the testator applies, although it is different than that in force at the time the will was executed.[93]

[§ 166] B. Conflict of Laws—1. In General. Questions of the conflict of laws with respect to the remoteness of limitations of interests or estates in property arise where statutory changes have made the rule against perpetuities different in different jurisdictions.[94]

[§ 167] 2. Limitations of Realty.[95] The validity or invalidity, under the rule against perpetuities and statutory modifications thereof or substitutes therefor, of a limitation of an interest or estate in realty is governed by the law of the jurisdiction in which the realty is situate;[96] and the same has been held true of a limitation of an estate for years in realty.[97]

[§ 168] 3. Limitations of Personalty.[98] The validity or invalidity, under the rule against perpetuities and statutory modifications thereof or substitutes therefor, of a gift or limitation of an interest in personalty is ordinarily governed by the law of the jurisdiction in which is the donor's domicile;[99] and where a trust of personal property would be valid under the law of the donor's domicile, it will ordinarily be administered, on grounds of comity, by the courts of a foreign jurisdiction, although it would be invalid under the law of such foreign state.[1] On the other hand, where such a trust is valid under the law of the place where it is to be administered but would be invalid under the law of the donor's domicile, it has been held that the courts of the former jurisdiction will sustain and administer it;[2] and the courts of the jurisdiction in which is the donor's domicile have allowed the validity of such a trust to be governed by the laws of the jurisdiction in which it is to be so held, to the extent of permitting the property to vest in the trustees where that may be done without offending local law,[3] on the ground that rules against remoteness or suspension of alienation are local rules of policy and the courts of one state can have no interest in the disposition of personal property in a

[a] Thus, although a will contains provisions which were in violation of the statute against perpetuities in force at the time of its execution, it is not invalid when it conforms to the requirements of law at the testator's death, the statute having been repealed in the interim. Eaton v. Eaton, 88 Conn. 286, 91 A 196.

[§ 169] 4. Equitable Conversion.[5] When an instrument creating or transferring an interest or estate in property directs an immediate and absolute conversion of one species of property into another,[6] or of property in one jurisdiction into property in another jurisdiction,[7] the validity of the limitations of such property will be determined, as though such conversion had taken place at their creation, by the law applicable to the property into which there has been a conversion.[8]

[§ 170] 5. Realty and Personalty in Same Limitation. In accordance with the principles hereinabove stated, limitations of interests or estates in realty and those in personalty may be governed, so far as respects their validity under the rule against perpetuities or statutory substitutes therefor, by different laws;[9] and when interests or estates in both real and personal property are created by the same limitation, they are severable, and the validity of the limitation as to one species of property does not depend upon its validity as to the other,[10] except where the scheme of distribution is entire and its failure as to either species of property destroys the purpose of the limitation.[11]

XIV. RIGHT TO ASSERT RULE OR STATUTE

[§ 171] A. In General. The invalidity of a limitation of property because of its violation of the rule against perpetuities,[12] or of a statute additional thereto or substitutionary therefor,[13] can be asserted, generally speaking, only by one having an interest in the property,[14] and in the case of testamentary dispositions it has been held that the question of their validity is not one to be raised by the executor,[15] and that a residuary legatee has no standing to assert that invalidity results from the application of a remainder in a fund to specific legacies instead of its relegation to the residuary estate.[16]

[§ 172] B. Estoppel.[16½] While the right to question the validity of limitations may be lost, upon the ordinary principles of estoppel,[17] it appears to be settled that the acceptance of benefits under valid provisions of a will or other instrument does not preclude the recipient from asserting the invalidity of other limitations therein,[18] and that no agreement by the parties[19] and no plea of estoppel[20] can result in the creation or maintenance of an interest or estate which is prohibited by law.

PERPETUI USUS CAUSA. For the purpose of continuous use.[1]

4. See cases supra note 3.
"The law of this state inhibiting . . . the suspension of the power of alienation of real estate and the absolute ownership of personal property, is founded upon a public policy of our own. . . . It is not a matter of any public concern whatever to this state whether the personal property of a person domiciled here shall pass to his heirs or next of kin in a foreign country, or to trustees in trust for charity residing there, or even to a foreign corporation for purpose of charity. Our law with respect to the creation of trusts, the suspension of the power of alienation of real estate, and the absolute ownership of personal[ty], was designed only to regulate the holding of property under our laws and in our state, and a trust intended to take effect in another state, or in a foreign country, would not seem to be within either its letter or spirit. When a citizen of this state, or a person domiciled here, makes a gift of personal estate to foreign trustees for the purpose of a foreign charity, our courts will not interpose our local laws with respect to trusts and accumulations to arrest the disposition made by the owner of his property, but will inquire as to two things: First, whether all the forms and requisites necessary to constitute a valid testamentary instrument, under our law, have been complied with; and second, whether the foreign trustees are competent to take the gift, for the purposes expressed, and to administer the trust under the law of the country where the gift was to take effect." [§ 6] F. Personal Effects.[98] When used without qualifying words, generally includes such tangible property as is worn or carried about the person,[99] although not restricted to that meaning;[1] effects movable or chattel property of any kind;[2] effects of a personal character, especially as used in wills, tariff laws, etc.;[3] goods and items of property having a more or less intimate relation to the person;[4] personal luggage as distinguished from merchandise;[5] such property especially appertaining to one's person.[6]

As used in wills its meaning may be derived from descriptions of articles and classifications immediately preceding;[7] but when not restricted by the context it may mean everything embraced within the description "personal property."[8]

[§ 7] G. Personal Estate.[9] While a term of wide signification,[10] it is not ambiguous or uncertain, its common and legal meaning being entirely clear.[11] In its ordinary legal signification[12] it is understood to embrace every species of property not of a freehold nature,[13] including intangible personal property as well as tangible.[14] It may appear, however, from the surrounding circumstances that the term is used in a more restricted sense, as in the sense of personal effects,[15] or tangible personal property.[16]

PERSON OF COLOR.[39]

PER STIRPES.[41]

PERSUADE.[42] To advise;[43] argue or reason into a certain belief or course of conduct;[44] to bring the will of another to a desired decision by some influence exerted upon it short of compulsion;[45] to bring to any particular opinion;[46] commend by exposition, argument, or demonstration;[47] to counsel;[48] to incline the will;[49] to inculcate by argument;[50] to induce;[51] to influence by argument or expostulation;[52] to prevail upon by argument, advice, expostulations, or reasons;[53] urge the acceptance or practice of;[54] to win over.[55] The word conveys the idea of a completed act, of succeeding in what is attempted,[56] and has been distinguished from "solicit."[57]

Phrases: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian,"[58] "by a preponderance of proof is meant that you are persuaded," etc.,[59] "persuade a seaman to refuse to join his ship,"[60] "persuaded in his own mind."[61]

PERSUASION.[62] Act of persuading, influencing, or winning over the mind or will to some conclusion, determination, or course of action.[63] In religious affairs, a creed or belief, or a sect or party adhering to a creed or system of opinions.[64]

Lawful persuasion. That which is not directed to the accomplishment of an illegal and unlawful purpose,[65] and appeals to the judgment, reason, or sentiment, leaving the mind free to act of its own volition.[66] Where there is no such freedom of action, more than mere persuasion has been exercised, and it amounts to duress, intimidation, coercion, or other like influence.[67]

PERTAIN. To be appurtenant to;[68] to be dependent upon;[69] to belong;[70] to belong or pertain, whether by right of nature, appointment, or custom;[71] have connection with;[72] to relate, as "things pertaining to life."[73]

Pertaining to.[74] Concerning;[75] relating.[76]

PERTENENCIA. In Spanish law, a right or share in something; that which is accessory to something else.[77]

PERTICULER.[78] A word supposed to mean regular or straight, in the same sense as those adjectives are sometimes applied to one wing of a political party in distinction from those who have seceded from the regular organization.[79]

PERVERSE.[94] Distorted from the right;[95] not right;[96] turned away or deviating from what is right, proper, correct, etc.;[97] turned the wrong way.[98]

Perverse verdict.[99] A verdict rendered by a jury which chooses not to take the law from the judge, but acts on its own erroneous view of the law;[1] a verdict rendered in disregard of the law as given to the jury by the court;[2] a verdict whereby the jury refuse to follow the directions of the judge on a point of law.[3] It is not necessary that the jury should have acted dishonestly or from improper motives to render a verdict perverse;[4] it is sufficient that they have disregarded the judge's instructions.[5] However, a verdict which is contrary to an erroneous instruction is not perverse.[6]

PERVERSE VERDICT.[7]

PERVERSION.[8] The act of perverting; a turning from truth or propriety; a diverting from the true intent or object.[9]

PERVERSITY.[10] A term which suggests a state of being moved consciously or unconsciously, most generally the former, to look at things from a wrong standpoint.[11] hardwood sold by the respondent as 'Philippine mahogany,' and this prevents such hardwoods from serving such uses for which mahogany is particularly adapted, and there is evidence to support the finding that such woods are not suitable for cabinet-making, because of the prevalence of wormholes, which constitute serious defects, and that they are too soft for flooring and not suitable for the construction of lamps, because they do not take the required finish; that they are not susceptible to the finish required by piano manufacturers on the exposed surfaces of pianos, nor are they suitable for carving. When used in furniture, it is necessary to fill the wormholes before the wood is stained or varnished, and such filling destroys the even appearance of the surface. They do not retain subsurface luster peculiar to mahogany, and, unlike mahogany, they do not beautify with age. I. DEFINITIONS

[By William Quinby DeFuniak]

[§ 1] A. Dentist.[1] A dentist is a dental surgeon;[2] one who performs manual or mechanical operations to preserve teeth, to cleanse, extract, insert, or repair them;[3] one who practices dental surgery and mechanical dentistry;[4] one whose profession it is to clean and extract teeth, repair them when diseased, and replace them when necessary, by artificial ones.[5] A dentist may be included within the meaning of "mechanic,"[6] "physician,"[7] or "surgeon,"[8] as these terms are used in statutes.

"Horse dentist" may be defined as one whose practice is in the care of horses' teeth.[9]

[§ 2] B. Doctor—1. As a Noun. In common speech, as well as in university parlance, "doctor" or the abbreviation "Dr." as a prefix,[10] or the letter "D." in connection with other letters in certain abbreviations as a suffix,[11] signifies an academic distinction founded upon having received a degree.[12] The word is used commonly to indicate skill in the general subject of medicine,[13] and means a person who practices medicine;[14] a physician;[15] a physician who administers medicine and physic;[16] a practitioner of physic.[17]

[§ 3] 2. As a Verb. As a verb "doctor" means to administer medicine or medical treatment;[18] to apply medicines for the cure of;[19] to prescribe or treat medically, as to doctor a sick man, to doctor a cold;[20] to treat as a doctor or physician;[21] to treat medicinally.[22]

[§ 4] C. Physician.[23] A word derived from the Greek word "phusis," meaning nature,[24] and defined as one authorized to prescribe remedies for and treat diseases;[25] one lawfully engaged in the practice of medicine;[26] one skilled in both medicine and surgery;[27] one versed in, or practicing the art of, medicine;[28] one who practices the art of healing

28. Peo. v. Siman, 278 Ill. 256, 257, 115 NE 817 [quot Waldo v. Poe, 14 F. (2d) 749, 752].

"He is presumed to be familiar with the anatomy of the human body in its entirety; to understand the science of physiology and the laws of hygiene, and to be able to minister, as

disease and preserving health;[29] one who professes or practices medicine, or the healing art;[30] one whose profession it is to prescribe and administer medicine in the treatment of disease, or the relief of the sick, after diagnosing the complaint;[31] a person skilled in physic or the art of healing;[32] a person who has received the degree of doctor of medicine from an incorporated institution.[33] The term has also been the subject of statutory definition.[34] It is the broadest term our language contains applicable to one who practices medicine, including both medicine and surgery in its original meaning.[35] It is not limited to the disciples of any particular school;[36] but is of very wide significance,[37] and may include dentists,[38] and includes the term "surgeon"[39] and many specialists within the field of medicine.[40]

Phrases: "Attended by physician,"[41] "attending physician,"[42] "duties of physician,"[43] "legally qualified physician,"[44] "physician now registered,"[45] "physician or surgeon,"[46] "physician registered to practice,"[47] "physicians and surgeons,"[48] "physicians in good standing;"[49] "physicians practicing,"[50] "physician's prescription,"[51] "regularly qualified physician,"[52] "regular physician,"[53] and "traveling physician."[54]

[§ 5] D. Practitioner.[55] As regards the practice of medicine, the terms "practitioner" and "physician" are synonymous.[56]

"It is a waste of time, in our judgment, to view the term 'physician' from the standpoint of members of the profession belonging to the few great schools." State v. Schmidt, supra.

[a] "The legislature conceived that it was dealing with the entire class of persons known as physicians, in the broadest sense of the term, not in any narrow sense, which would favor those claiming, and perhaps entitled to, superior distinction. The purpose was very far from that of creating a monopoly in favor of special schools of medicine. The term was evidently used in its proper sense, that of including any person of whatever school, and whether belonging to any known school, engaged, in good faith, in treating human ills by any remedy or remedies, however simple, so as to be known among the people as a physician." State v. Schmidt, 138 Wis. 53, 60, 119 NW 647 [partly quot Waldo v. Poe, 14 F. (2d) 749, 752].

37. In re Hunter, 60 N. C. 372, 373 [quot Waldo v. Poe, 14 F. (2d) 749, 752]; Isaacson v. Wisconsin Casualty Co., 187 Wis. 252, 203 NW 918, 920.

"[We need not] go to the lexical definitions, where we would find a wide range, down to the simple definition, 'one who administers medicine to cure disease.' That medicine includes anything, however simple, 'administered in the treatment of disease,' and that disease includes any kind of disorder of the human system, needs no support other than our common knowledge." State v. Schmidt, 138 Wis. 53, 60, 119 NW 647.

38. See infra this note.

[a] In its broad sense the term "physician" includes a dentist. In re Hunter, 60 N. C. 372.

[b] But, as used in some statutes, "physician" or "surgeon" does not include a dentist. Peo. v. De France, 104 Mich. 563, 62 NW 709, 28 LRA 139 (a statute providing that communications to persons authorized to practice medicine or surgery shall be privileged); State v. Fisher, 119 Mo. 344, 353, 24 SW 167, 22 LRA 799 (a statute exempting a practitioner of medicine or surgery from jury duty); State v. McMinn, 118 N. C. 1259, 24 SE 523 (a statute protecting one who sells intoxicating liquor on Sunday on the prescription of a physician).

39. In re Hunter, 60 N. C. 372, 373 [quot Waldo v. Poe, 14 F. (2d) 749, 752]; Isaacson v. Wisconsin Casualty Co., 187 Wis. 25, 203 NW 918, 920.

[c] "General practitioner, [is] one who practises both medicine and surgery. Formerly in England the general practitioner, also called surgeon apothecary or apothecary, was the ordinary family medical attendant,

[§ 6] E. Surgeon.[57] A surgeon formerly was a mere operator, who joined his practice to that of a barber,[58] and whose business was with external ailments and injuries.[59] In latter times this has been changed, and the profession has risen into great and deserved eminence.[60] Now, a surgeon is a physician who treats bodily injuries and ills by manual operations and the use of surgical instruments and appliances.[61]

[§ 7] F. Surgery.[62] Surgery is a branch of medical science,[63] and more specifically, that branch of medical science which treats of mechanical or operative measures for healing diseases, deformities, or injuries.[64] Also, the word may be employed as designating a place where surgical operations are performed, or where medicines are prepared.[65]

[§ 8] G. Veterinarian.[66] One who practices the art of treating diseases and injuries of domestic animals, surgically or medically.[67]

[§ 9] H. Veterinary Surgeon.[68] A veterinary surgeon is a person lawfully practicing the art of treating and healing injuries and diseases of domestic animals.[69]

[§ 10] I. Miscellaneous Terms. The following terms among others listed in the note below[70] have been defined or employed in adjudicated cases: "Abrasion;"[71] "accident;"[72] "adenoids;"[73] "affection;"[74] "ailment;"[75] "alienists;"[76] "allopath-supplying drugs as well as advice to his patients. He was licensed to practise by the Apothecaries' Company (incorporated 1617), and was in rank below the physician or surgeon. II. RIGHT TO PRACTICE MEDICINE AND SURGERY[1]

[By STANLEY A. HACKETT]

[§ 11] A. In General. Practicing medicine is not malum in se[2] or a nuisance per se,[3] and, when unaccompanied by acts which are in themselves evil, vicious, and criminal, is not a crime at common law.[4] While the right to practice medicine or dentistry is a valuable right,[5] and is sometimes said to be a property right[6] or to partake of the nature of both liberty[7] and property,[8] it is not an absolute,[9] unqualified,[10] or vested[11] right, but is subordinate to the police power of the state,[12] and also to the power of congress to make laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the Eighteenth Amendment.[13] No one has a right to practice medicine or dentistry without having the necessary qualifications of learning and skill.[14] It is sometimes said that the practice of medicine is a mere privilege.[15-42]

[§ 12] B. Regulation or Prohibition[43]—1. In General. In the proper exercise of the police power of a state,[44] the legislature thereof may control[45] and reasonably regulate[46] the practice of medicine and surgery without violating constitutional provisions.[47] Likewise, the legislature may regulate the practice of chiropody,[48] chiropractics,[49] dentistry,[50] optometry,[51] osteopathy,[52] or veterinary medicine, surgery, and dentistry,[53] it being within its power to regulate not only the practice of medicine in its most general sense,[54] but also the practice of any part of medicine and surgery[55] or any branch or department of the healing art.[56-99] However, to be valid, the regulations enacted by the legislature must be reasonable[1-16] and bear some relation to the service to be rendered by the practitioner,[17] as well as to the end or object to be attained,[18] which is to protect the public from being mistreated or mislead by incompetent or unscrupulous practitioners,[19] or, as sometimes stated, they must be reasonably necessary and appropriate for the accomplishment of legitimate objects within the domain of the police power.[20] Also, while the legislature may regulate practice by prohibiting a person from engaging in it unless he holds a license or certificate,[21] or is registered,[22] its power does not extend to an absolute and unqualified prohibition of practice.[23]

Congress has power to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery in the District of Columbia.[24]

In Canada the legislature of a province may regulate the practice of medicine.[25]

State board of optometry can adopt no rules and regulations which are inconsistent with the express provisions of a statute.[26]

Amendment or repeal of statutes. The rules governing the amendment[27] and repeal[28] of statutes generally are applicable in determining whether a statute regulating the practice of medicine, surgery, or dentistry have been amended[29] or repealed.[30]

Application of statutes.[31] A state statute regulating the practice of medicine and surgery may be applicable to all persons in the state who practice medicine and surgery,[32] or the art of healing,[33] regardless of the therapeutic agency employed.[34] Also, such a statute may apply to physicians or healers practicing when it takes effect.[35] However, a general medical practice act may properly provide that it shall not apply to dentists, pharmacists, and optometrists to the extent that the practice of their professions is regulated by other statutes applicable thereto.[36] In the absence of dominion legislation on the subject, a statute enacted by a Canadian province is applicable to an Indian residing on a reservation and practicing medicine outside of the reservation, with white persons as patients.[37]

Construction of statutes. Generally speaking, statutes enacted for the purpose of regulating and safeguarding the practice of medicine and surgery,[38] and thereby protecting the public health,[39] should be given a liberal construction, but, at least in some jurisdictions, this is not true of statutes creating offenses.[40] Two or more statutes relating to the same subject matter are to be read together as parts of a homogeneous body of laws;[41] and different sections of the same statute will, so far as practicable, be reconciled so as to make them harmonious and consistent.[42-56]

[§ 13] 2. Conditions—a. In General. The state may impose conditions upon the exercise of the right or privilege of practicing medicine.[57] The only limit to the legislative power in prescribing conditions to the right to practice is that they shall be reasonable;[58] and whether they are reasonable the courts must judge.[59] The fact that the conditions may be optometry,[75] osteopathy,[76] or veterinary medicine and surgery,[77] without a license or certificate, and defining, or stating what acts shall constitute, the practice of these professions,[78] are generally upheld as valid and constitutional; but provisions of such a statute are void if they go beyond the proper limits of the police power[79] or violate constitutional provisions.[80] A statute exempting persons who have practiced a prescribed number of years from the requirement of obtaining a license or certificate for the practice of dentistry may be repealed.[81]

Power of municipality. It is held that the legislature may authorize a municipality to require, as a police regulation, a license to practice dentistry[82] or medicine;[83] but it is also held that, where a physician has received a license from the state to practice medicine, a city cannot require him to take out an additional license as a condition precedent to practicing his profession in the city.[84]

[§ 15] (b) Construction of Penal Statutes Generally.[85] Except in some jurisdictions,[86] a statute making the practice of medicine, dentistry, or optometry without a license or certificate an offense is strictly construed,[87] in accordance with the rule governing the construction of penal statutes generally.[88] However, the statute should not be construed so strictly as to defeat the obvious legislative intent.[89]

[§ 16] (c) Necessity[90]—aa. In General. In some states, early statutes relating to the practice of medicine and surgery did not require a license,[91] or required it only when the practitioner did not possess a diploma from a medical college or other prescribed evidence of qualification;[92] but at the present time there are statutes in practically all states which provide that before a person may practice medicine and surgery in the state he must apply for and receive a license or certificate of qualification[93] from the state board of medical examiners or other designated agency.[94] Also, a license or certificate for the practice of dentistry is frequently required by statute,[95] and in a number of, although not all, the states there are statutes requiring a license or certificate for the practice of chiropractics,[96] optometry,[97] osteopathy,[98] and veterinary medicine and surgery.[99] Such a statute is mandatory,[1] and, unless a person, or the services rendered by him, come within an express statutory exemption,[2] he cannot lawfully practice in the state a profession within the scope of the statute without a proper license or certificate of qualification,[8] even though he has practiced and been registered in another state,[4] is an officer, agent, or employee of a corporation and acts or purports to act for the corporation,[5] or has a legal and constitutional right to pray for the cure of sickness and disease.[6] However, practicing medicine or osteopathy without the license required by law is not a nuisance per se.[7] Also, it is not a crime at common law to practice medicine without a license;[8] but practicing without a license is frequently made an offense by statute.[9] Such an offense is to be distinguished from the offense of failing to have a license recorded,[10] and is not committed by the failure of a regularly licensed physician to file his license[11] or have it recorded.[12] Under the construction placed upon some statutes, the offense is a continuing one,[13] but this is not true under other statutes[14] which are construed to make each specific act or treatment a separate offense.[15]

[a] For example (1) a statute in so far as it requires examination by and a license from, a dental board before one may "own, run, or manage" a dental office, as distinguished from the actual practice of dentistry, is not a proper exercise of the police power, and is unconstitutional. State v. Brown, 37 Wash. 97, 79 P 635, 107 AmSR 798, 68 LRA 889. (2) A statute requiring a license for the practice of optometry, and defining "optometry" as including every means for the measurement of the powers of vision and the adaptation of lenses for the aid thereof, is, as applied to the mere changing of lenses until a customer is suited, unconstitutional in that it imposes a requirement having no relation to, or tendency to promote, the public health, comfort, safety, or welfare. Peo. v. Griffith, 280 Ill. 18, 117 NE 195. (3) "To require a chiropodist to obtain the education and license of a physician and surgeon, an osteopath or a chiropractor, is not a reasonable regulation and is utterly unnecessary for the protection of the public. So far as it affects the practice of chiropody, the act is unconstitutional and void." State v. Armstrong, 38 Ida. 493, 502, 225 P 491, 33 ALR 835.

In county.[16] A statute providing that a physician or dentist shall obtain a license in the county in which he resides or practices[17] will be given effect according to its terms;[18] but some statutes do not impose such a requirement,[19] and a license issued thereunder entitles the holder to practice throughout the state.[20] A person with a recorded diploma may be within a statute requiring a license or certificate from a board of medical examiners in a county,[21] and yet not be indictable for practicing without such license or certificate.[22]

[§ 17] bb. Exemptions.[23] In many states, the statutes requiring a license or certificate for the practice of medicine and surgery expressly except from their operation certain classes of persons, and services rendered in particular cases.[24] Thus it is commonly provided that the statute shall not apply to any commissioned medical officer of the United States army, navy, or marine service;[25] medical examiners of relief departments of railroad companies;[26] members of the staffs of hospitals and asylums;[27] physicians called from another state for consultation, or to treat a particular case, and who do not otherwise practice in the state;[28] services rendered in case of emergency;[29] the administration of family, domestic, or ordinary household medicines or remedies;[30] or the practice of the religious tenets of any church.[31] Also, some statutes provide

[a] Thus in one state it was provided by statute that a graduate of a medical college in the United States, whose diploma was recorded, might practice medicine without a license in any county having only a medical board established by the county commissioners; but where there was a board of medical examiners, organized according to the constitution of the state medical association, and in affiliation with it, a license or certificate of qualification from such board was necessary. Another statute provided for the punishment of any person practicing medicine without a license, diploma, or certificate, or who was not "a regular graduate of a medical college of this State, having had his diploma legally recorded." It was held that a graduate of a medical college of another state whose diploma was recorded was not indictable for practicing without license or certificate from a board of medical examiners in the county, organized under, or in affiliation with, the state association. [d] Osteopathy does not come that they shall not apply to clairvoyants who do not practice medicine;[32] a cosmopathic method of healing;[33] the practice of osteopathy;[34] opticians[35] or nonitinerant persons or manufacturers who mechanically fit or sell lenses or engage in the mechanical examination of eyes for the purpose of adjusting spectacles, eyeglasses, or lenses;[36] or to a medical student prescribing under the supervision of a preceptor;[37] and, likewise, some statutes prohibiting the practice of dentistry without a license provide that they shall not be construed to prohibit a registered student of a licensed dentist from assisting his preceptor in dental operations while in the presence, and under the direct and immediate personal supervision, of the latter;[38] and some statutes making it an offense for an uncertified woman, habitually and for gain, to attend women in childbirth except attendance under the direction of a qualified medical practitioner.[39] A statutory exemption is, of course, available to a person when, and only when, he, or the service performed by him, is within its terms.[40] A statute exempting a graduate of a medical college from taking an examination[41] does not authorize him to practice without a license.[42]

Prior practitioners.[43] While a statute exempting persons who have practiced in the state for a prescribed period of time previous to the passage thereof from the requirement of obtaining a license or certificate thereunder will be given effect in a case within its terms,[44] the exemption applies only to persons who have been engaged in lawful[45] practice in the state[46] for the prescribed period immediately prior to the date of the enactment.[47] Likewise a statutory exception or exemption of physicians "now" registered will be given effect in a case falling within its terms;[48] but a statute exempting persons legally practicing at the time of its passage does not apply to a person who was not legally practicing because he had not obtained a certificate required by prior statutes.[49]

[§ 18] cc. Application of Requirement to Acts or Practice[50]—(aa) In General. Some statutes requiring a license or certificate for the practice of medicine, but not stating what acts shall constitute such practice, are construed to use the term "practice of medicine" in its ordinary, common, and popular sense,[51] but others are construed to use the term in its technical sense.[52] Also, some statutory definitions of the term correspond substantially with the popular understanding thereof,[53] but other statutes are deemed to express a legislative intent to broaden the definition of the term so that, in addition to its generally accepted meaning, it will include acts not within the general meaning of the term.[54] The term "medicine" is used in the statutes as indicating within a statutory exception of persons treating the sick by mental or spiritual means. Peo. v. Gordon, 194 Ill. 560, 62 NE 858, 88 AmSR 165 [rev 96 Ill. A. 456]; Peo. v. Jones, 92 Ill. A. 447.

[e] Practice of christian science (1) is within a general exception of the practice of the religious tenets of any church. Peo. v. Cole, 219 N. Y. 98, 113 NE 790, LRA1917C 816. (2) In some states the practice of christian science is expressly excepted by statute. See statutory provisions. (3) Christian science treatment as within general prohibition of practicing without license see infra § 21.

[f] Lack of mention of spirits.—Where defendant, who called himself a spiritualist, attempted to treat a patient by the laying on of hands and manipulation of her shoulders, during which time he said nothing about spirits, his acts were not within a statutory exception of treatment of the sick by spiritual means. Peo. v. Krause, 291 Ill. 64, 125 NE 726.

[g] Religious belief and physical means.—A statute providing that nothing contained therein shall interfere with religious belief in the treatment of diseases does not exempt a person who is diagnosing diseases and treating patients by outward physical means, such as manipulation and rubbing, although he believes that it is his duty to carry out the words of Jesus as to healing generally. State v. Peters, 87 Kan. 265, 123 P 751.

[h] Prayer coupled with administration of patent medicines.—A person who been commissioned by a church, one of whose tenets of faith is the practice of spiritual healing, as a spiritual healer and who in treating patients indulges in silent prayer but who also administers to his patients patent medicines is not within the exception. Peo. v. Vogelgesang, 221 N. Y. 290, 116 NE 977.

[i] Exemption of treatment by prayer does not apply where the use of prayer in the treatment of a particular patient is a mere subterfuge to escape the prohibitory provisions of the statute. Peo. v. Cosper, 76 Cal. A. 597, 245 P 466.

Treatment by spiritual means as within statute generally see infra § 21.

a science or profession,[55] rather than a remedial agent for the cure or mitigation of disease;[56] and to be within the statutes a person must engage in practice as a business or calling,[57] or at least hold himself out as doing so.[58] It is not necessary for a person to practice generally either as a physician or surgeon to bring him within the operation of a statute requiring a license or certificate;[59] it is sufficient if he engages in the practice of a distinct department of either profession.[60] Likewise, a statute requiring a license for the practice of veterinary medicine and surgery applies to the practice of any branch of veterinary medicine or surgery.[61] Indeed, some statutes are broadly construed to apply to the practice of the healing art generally[62] and to the treatment of the sick by means not included in any department of medicine or surgery.[63]

Aiding and abetting unlicensed practice. A person who aids and abets another in practicing medicine without a license is subject to prosecution,[64] although he himself is licensed to practice.[65]

[§ 19] (bb) Diagnosis, Prescription, or Treatment Generally. Under the broad and comprehensive terms of some statutes requiring a license or certificate,[66] and the construction placed thereon, they apply to the treatment[67] of any human ailment, disease, disorder, pain, injury, infirmity, or deformity[68] by any system,[69] or without any system,[70] and by the employment or application of any curative or therapeutic agency,[71] whether administered internally or applied externally,[72] provided the giving or administration of the treatment is pursued as a business, calling, or profession[73] and for compensation.[74] Also, under the statutes a license or certificate is necessary to enable a person lawfully to engage in the business or practice, for fee or reward, of prescribing, or prescribing and furnishing, drugs, medicines, or other agencies or remedies for the treatment, cure, or relief of any bodily disease.[75] While a person without a license or certificate undoubtedly violates the statutes when he not only diagnoses, but also prescribes, recommends, furnishes, or applies a remedy,[76] he may also violate the statutes by diagnosing without prescrib-

Hueser, 205 Iowa 132, 215 NW 643. (2) The giving of any direction to a patient for the use or application by him of any drugs, medicine, or other remedy, for the cure of any bodily disease, is prescribing a remedy within the meaning of the statute. State v. Lawson, 65 A 593, 22 Del. 395, 69 A 1066. (3) Oral prescriptions are within the statutes. State v. Lawson, supra; Peo. v. Mash, 235 Ill. A. 314. (4) "Prescribe" defined see [31 Cyc 1165]. (5) "Prescription" defined see [31 Cyc 1165].
[b] Prescribing remedy in single instance is not practicing medicine within a statute providing that any person shall be regarded as practicing medicine who shall repeatedly prescribe any drug, medicine, or other agency for the treatment, cure, or relief of any bodily disease. Foo Lun v. State, 84 Ark. 475, 106 SW 946.
[c] Subject matter of prescription.—(1) The medicine prescribed need not be a drug, so long as it is a healing agency. Redmond v. State, (Miss.) 118 S 360. (2) The fact that the substance prescribed and furnished as a remedial agent may have value as a food, and a tendency to build up and restore wasted or diseased tissue, will not deprive it of its character as a medicine, if it is administered and employed for that purpose. State v. Bresee, 137 Iowa 673, 114 NW 45, 24 LRANS 103. (3) According to the construction placed upon some statutes relating to the prescription or direction of the use of any drug, medicine, or other agency, the word "agency" is limited to substances of the same general nature, quality, and character as drugs or medicines. Ruiz, 25 Porto Rico 548), (2) but where the prescription is so made it is not necessary that the offender use the letters "M. D." in connection with his name or publicly announce himself to be a physician or surgeon (Peo. v. Ruiz, supra).

ing any drug or administering any treatment,[77] or by treating, prescribing, or prescribing and furnishing, medicine, without making any diagnosis.[78] That the patient treated or prescribed for does not in fact have any ailment or disease does not prevent the application of the statutes.[79]

[§ 20] (cc) Practice without Drugs, Medicines, or Surgical Instruments[80]—aaa. In General. Some statutes requiring a license or certificate for the practice of medicine and surgery are construed to be limited to the mere administration of drugs or medicines and the use of surgical instruments,[81] but under the construction accorded a larger number of statutes imposing such a requirement, the prescription, administration, or employment of drugs[82] or medicines[83] or the use of surgical instruments or appliances,[84] is not necessary to bring a case within their terms and meaning.

Giving of electrical treatments is within the statutes.[85]

[§ 21] bbb. Mental or Spiritual Means.[86] The statutes requiring a license or certificate for the practice of medicine cover the commercial practice of healing by prayer,[87] coupled with manipulation;[88] but, where no charge is made for the service, and recourse is had merely to prayer, without the employment of material or human agencies, it cannot be said that the person invoking Divine interposition in behalf of another is within the statutes requiring a license or certificate.[89] Some statutes have been held to apply to attempts to heal diseases by mental suggestion,[90] or by a system designated as "suggestive therapeutics;"[91] but other statutes have been construed not to apply to mental therapeutics[92] or any form of treatment of the sick which makes faith the curative agency.[93]

Laying on of hands. In some cases it is held to be a violation of the statutes for an unlicensed person to treat or undertake to heal by the laying on of hands,[94] coupled with mental suggestion,[95] prayer,[96] or prayer and manipulation of the muscles and nerve control;[97] but in other cases it is held that the laying on of hands coupled with alleged healing by a direct Divine agency is not within the statutes.[98]

Treatment by hypnotism is within the statutes where it is accompanied by directions as to the use of drugs, medicines, or other remedies by the patient,[99] but not otherwise.[1]

Christian science treatment.[2] Under a statute making it unlawful to practice medicine without a license or certificate, but not attempting to define what constitutes "practicing medicine," it is held that the term does not include the giving of treatment by the system known as "christian science;"[3] but where the meaning of the term has been ex-

"The science of diagnosing human diseases and human ailments has come to be a distinct branch or department of the medical profession; the diagnostician limiting his efforts to a discovery of the disease or ailment from which a patient may be suffering, its character and location, leaving the treatment thereof to some other physician or surgeon. This is a matter of common knowledge. And it requires no discussion or argument to demonstrate that the physician who thus applies his learning and energies is performing a highly important duty of the profession, and is engaged in the practice thereof, though he prescribes no drug and administers no specific treatment." [a] Christian science as "other agency."—Under a statute prohibiting any person not having a certificate from the board of medical registration from prescribing, directing, or recommending any drug, medicine, or other agency for the treatment, cure, or relief of any bodily infirmity, tended by statute to cover all treatment of whatever nature for the cure of physical or mental ailments, the giving of christian science treatment without a license is in violation of the law.[4]

[§ 22] ccc. Adjustment or Manipulation.[5] The treatment of a patient by manipulation of parts of his body, such as nerves, bones, and tissues, is sometimes,[6] although not always,[7] held to be within statutes requiring a license or certificate.

Osteopathy.[8] As heretofore stated, some statutes expressly require a license or certificate for the practice of osteopathy,[9] and some expressly except the practice of osteopathy from a requirement of a license or certificate for the practice of medicine and surgery.[10] Whether or not the practice of osteopathy is within statutes which require a license or certificate for the practice of medicine or the treatment of disease, but which do not expressly include or exclude the practice of osteopathy, depends upon the terms of, and the construction placed upon, the particular statute, it being held to be within the broad and comprehensive terms of, and the construction placed upon, some statutes,[11] but not to be within statutes forbidding the prescribing or applying of any drug, medicine, appliance, or other agency by an unlicensed person,[12] or statutes construed to be limited to the mere administration of drugs or medicines and the use of surgical instruments.[13]

Chiropractics.[14] As previously stated, some statutes expressly require a license or certificate for the practice of chiropractics,[15] and, according to the weight of authority, statutes requiring a license or certificate for the practice of medicine or the treatment of human diseases generally, and not expressly mentioning chiropractics, are applicable to the practice of the profession of treating human diseases by the chiropractic system,[16] but a few statutes are construed not to apply to such practice.[17]

[§ 23] ddd. Massage.[18] A masseur without a license or certificate to practice medicine does not violate the statutes requiring such a license or certificate where he confines himself to the particular sphere of labor of a masseur[19] and merely massages other persons[20] without reference to any pains or diseases which such persons may profess to have;[21] but the rule is otherwise where he undertakes to treat diseases[22] for pay,[23] and in doing so uses means not customarily used by a masseur in his particular sphere of labor.[24]

[§ 24] (dd) Professing To Cure or Heal. In many states there are statutes which, although varying considerably in phraseology, are to the same general effect that a person shall be regarded as practicing medicine, within the meaning of a provision requiring a license or certificate, where he holds himself out as a physician, or publicly professes to treat, cure, or heal, either generally or by certain designated means, such as by advertisement or other public announcement, opening an office for the practice of medicine, or using, in connection with his name, the title "Doctor," "Dr.," or "M. D.," or any other word or abbreviation indicating that he is engaged in treating human ailments or diseases;[25] and a person performing acts within such statutes is of course amenable thereto.[26] The statutes apply to advertising or professing to treat, cure, or heal without drugs, medicines, or surgery[27] and, except in some jurisdictions,[28] to the use of the word "doctor" or "physician" in connection with some qualifying word, such as "osteopathic," "magnetic," or "drugless."[29] While actual treatment or practice is not necessary to bring a case within the statutes under consideration,[30] a public profession of an ability to heal will not subject a person to the penalties of the law, unless it is made with a view of undertaking to cure the afflicted.[31] In the absence of a statute on this subject, a statute merely prohibiting the practice of medicine by any person not qualified and licensed will not prohibit the assumption of the title "Doctor" by any person whatever his profession.[32]

Professing to treat eyes or fit glasses.[33] The statutes under consideration apply to a person who holds himself out as an eye specialist[34] or claims to be an ophthalmologist and prefixes the title "Dr." to his name,[35] but not to a person who advertises or professes only to fit spectacles to the eyes.[36] A statute requiring a certificate for the practice of optometry and making it an offense for a person without such certificate either to engage in the practice of optometry or to hold himself out to the public as qualified to engage in such practice is effective to prohibit a person without a certificate, who in fact only sells spectacles without attempting to test the eyes, from holding himself out to the public as qualified to engage in the practice of optometry.[37] The conduct, in the name of the unlicensed proprietor alone, of the business of a store or establishment, or department thereof, wherein the practice of optometry is carried on by an employee who has been duly licensed as an optometrist, does not amount to a holding out of the proprietor as a licensed optometrist.[38]

[§ 25] (ee) Dentistry Generally.[39] Under a statute requiring a license or certificate for the practice of dentistry,[40] a license or certificate is required for the performance of such work as a dentist may be properly called upon to do,[41] or for the doing of those things about or upon the human teeth or jaws which require skill, adequate training, and understanding in their performance,[42] including not only the filling,[43] extracting,[44] treating,[45] bridging,[46] and crowning,[47] of teeth, but also the taking of an impression, the making of artificial teeth therefrom, and the actual fitting or adjustment of such teeth.[48] It is held that, when not so provided by statute, the performance of a dental operation is not necessarily engaging in the practice of dentistry.[49] However, some statutes expressly provide that a person shall be deemed or understood to be practicing dentistry when he performs an operation upon the human teeth or jaws,[50] and the word "operation," as used in such statutes, means a dental operation[51] and not necessarily a surgical operation.[52] According to some authorities, the performance of a single act does not constitute the practice of dentistry,[53] but according to other authorities it is not necessary to bring a person within the statute that he shall practice dentistry habitually or frequently.[54] At any rate, a person practices as a dentist when he engages habitually in the methods or operations constituting dentistry.[55] A statute providing that a person shall be understood to be practicing dentistry when he manages or conducts as manager, proprietor, conductor, or otherwise a place where dental operations are performed is construed to apply only to a person who in some manner and to some extent, directly or indirectly, controls or directs some professional service of the kind that dentists are licensed to render.[56]

Using instruments upon teeth of horses is the practice of veterinary surgery within the meaning of some statutes.[57]

[§ 26] (ff) Treatment of Eyes or Fitting of Glasses.[58] A person who practices ophthalmology,[59] or who prescribes medicines[60] or gives medical treatment[61] for diseases of the eye, is within the statutes requiring a license or certificate to practice medicine; but the rule is otherwise as to a person who practices optometry,[62] or, in other words, a person who measures the powers of vision and adapts lenses for the correction and aid thereof,[63] who does not treat the eye,[64] and who, on the finding of a condition affording ground for suspicion of disease, advises the patient or customer to consult a physician.[65] As previously stated, some statutes expressly require a license or certificate for the practice of optometry[66] and exempt optometrists from the requirement of a license or certificate for the practice of medicine.[67]

[§ 27] (gg) Chiropody.[68] Doing the ordinary work of a chiropodist does not constitute the practice of medicine and surgery within the meaning of a valid statute making it unlawful to practice without a license;[69] but a chiropodist may be amenable to the statute where he performs acts which are without the scope of chiropody and constitute the practice of medicine and surgery.[70]

[§ 28] (hh) Obstetrics and Midwifery. A person practicing obstetrics[71] or midwifery[72] is within a statute requiring a license or certificate for practicing medicine or surgery.[73]

[§ 29] (ii) Sale and Prescription of Patent Medicines. Although the mere selling of patent medicines[74] by one who does not pretend to diagnose or cure disease, and determine what remedy is proper, is not a violation of a statute forbidding the practice of medicine by unlicensed persons,[75] still the fact that one gives his own proprietary medicine will not protect him where he attends and prescribes for sick persons and holds himself out as competent to prescribe or to treat and cure diseases.[76]

[§ 30] (jj) Sale of Instruments or appliances. A statute requiring a license or certificate for the practice of medicine does not apply to persons who merely advertise, puff, or sell mechanical instruments or devices,[77] although they claim that the use of

[a] For example a person was not practicing medicine within a statute requiring a certificate therefor where he was agent for the sale of an article or instrument to be attached to parts of the body, which he advertised would cure many diseases, and he urged people to buy it and try it, but he did not claim to be a physician or to practice medicine, did not examine his patrons or attempt to ascertain or tell them what their diseases were, and did not prescribe or administer drugs or remedies, nor apply the instrument to the bodies of purchasers. Peo. v. Lehr, 196 Ill. 361, 63 NE 725 [aff 93 Ill. A. 505].

such instruments or devices will cure human ills;[78] but selling and directing the application of plasters for the cure of cancer is "practicing" within the meaning of the statute.[79] A person is not practicing dentistry within the meaning of a statute where, for the purpose of selling dental instruments, he instructs licensed dentists in their use, and occasionally uses them on patients of such dentists without hire, and without holding himself out as a dentist.[80]

[§ 31] (kk) Practice under Authorized Practitioner. Where a person without a license or certificate performs acts constituting the practice of dentistry, medicine, or surgery, he is not relieved from liability therefor by the fact that he performs the acts as an assistant to,[81] or under the direction and supervision of,[82] a duly authorized practitioner, unless he is within an express statutory exemption.[83] However, the services of an ordinary nurse performed under the direction of a duly qualified surgeon are not within the statute.[84]

[§ 32] (ll) Practice after Refusal or Revocation of License or Certificate. While there is authority to the contrary,[85] it generally has been held that a person practicing medicine without a license is subject to prosecution therefor, even though the medical board has wrongfully or arbitrarily refused to issue him a license.[86] Likewise, under a statute making it penal to practice medicine without a certificate, a person whose certificate has been revoked is as much without one as a person to whom no certificate has ever been issued;[87] but under a statute prescribing a penalty for practicing "without first having procured a certificate," a conviction cannot be had for engaging in practice after the certificate has been revoked.[88]

[§ 33] (mm) Continuance of Prior Practice. Unless expressly exempted therefrom,[89] a person is subject to the provisions of a statute requiring a license or certificate for the practice of medicine, dentistry, or veterinary medicine and surgery, where, after the enactment of the statute, he continues a practice previously begun,[90] at least where the prior practice was illegal.[91]

[§ 34] (nn) Practice without Reward or Compensation.[92] As has been stated, various acts constitute the practice of medicine within the meaning of the statutes when they are done for a fee, reward, or compensation.[93] Conversely, most statutes forbidding the practice of medicine or dentistry without a license or certificate are, by their terms[94] and the construction placed thereon,[95] limited to practice for reward or compensation, at least where actual treatment or prescription is involved;[96] but it is otherwise as to a few statutes,[97] and it is also otherwise where the opening of an office for the practice of medicine[98] or a public announcement of a willingness to treat the sick[99] is involved. A case is within the statutes where some remuneration is received for acts constituting practice,[1] even though a separate fee is not charged for each service or operation performed,[2] a charge is not made immediately after the performance of the service or operation,[3] the fee or compensation is paid by a person other than the patient,[4] the remuneration consists of freewill offerings,[5] the practitioner is compensated only by a salary,[6] or he receives compensation indirectly through the medium of a religious corporation.[7]

[§ 36] (bb) Indictment, Information, Affidavit, or Complaint[21]—aaa. In General. The indictment, information, affidavit, or complaint in a prosecution for practicing medicine, dentistry, or osteopathy without a license or certificate in violation of a statute must state a public offense[22] under the statute,[23] and inform accused of the charge against him.[24] The offense is purely a statutory one,[25] and, if the statute so far individuates the crime that the offender has proper notice of the nature of the charge against him, it is sufficient to charge it in the language of the statute[26] or in terms substantially equivalent thereto,[27] but it is not sufficient merely to employ the language of the statute where such language is so general as not to meet the requirements of general statutes as to the contents of a complaint, indictment, or information.[28] In some jurisdictions, it is sufficient, in addition to allegations of time and venue, to aver that defendant practiced medicine or dentistry, or treated diseases of human beings, as the case may be, without a license or certificate.[29] In such jurisdictions it is not necessary to allege the particular acts done by defendant,[30] the precise character of dental operations performed by him,[31] the particular branch or department of medicine practiced by him,[32] or the school to which he belongs,[33] and while the system of medicine or treatment employed by him may,[34] it need not,[35] be averred. However, in a considerable number of the jurisdictions wherein the statutes define the practice of medicine or dentistry by declaring what acts shall constitute it,[36] it is necessary to allege facts showing that defendant performed one or more of the acts stated in the statutory definition.[37] It is not sufficient to allege that accused unlawfully practiced medicine.[38] The commission of the offense may be charged in a complaint on information and belief.[39]

Actual practice, treatment, or prescription must be alleged in an indictment or information for so practicing,[40] but not in an indictment or information for advertising or holding oneself out to the public as a physician or as willing to treat the afflicted.[41]

Allegation that accused professed to be a physician and surgeon is not necessary in an information charging him with treatment or offer of treatment for compensation.[42]

Commission of offense in different ways may be charged conjunctively in the indictment or information where the offense may be committed in such ways and they are not repugnant;[43] and it is held that an indictment which charges that defendant unlawfully "did practice or attempt to practice medicine or surgery" is not objectionable.[44]

Failure to register license or certificate. As practice by a person without having registered his license or certificate in the county of his residence and practice without having obtained a license or certificate are separate and distinct offenses,[45] allegations which are essential in an indictment or information for the former offense[46] may not be necessary in an indictment or information for the latter offense,[47] and where the latter offense is sufficiently charged, additional statements applicable to the former offense but not sufficient to charge it completely, may be rejected or disregarded as surplusage.[48]

[§ 37] bbb. Lack of License or Certificate.[49] It is necessary to allege,[50] in terms broad enough to meet the requirements of the applicable statute,[51] that accused did not have a license, certificate, or other authority required by the statute. Alleging that accused did not have a license from the board of health, without stating what board of health, is bad pleading,[52] but does not necessarily render the indictment fatally defective.[53]

[§ 38] ccc. Patient or Disease Treated. In a majority of jurisdictions a complaint, indictment, or information for practicing without a license or certificate need not state the name of the patient[54] or disease[55] treated by accused; nor need it allege that the person treated in fact had a disease[56] or that treatment was given to, or medicine was prescribed for, a human being as distinguished from a domestic animal.[57] In a few jurisdictions, however, it is necessary to name the individual treated or operated upon,[58] or give a proper excuse for not naming him;[59] and it is also necessary to make an averment as to the ailment of the patient.[60]

[§ 39] ddd. Reward or Compensation. Where the statute does not contain the words "fee or reward," an indictment for practicing medicine without a license need not charge that defendant practiced for "fee or reward."[61] Under statutes making compensation an element of the offense,[62] it has been both affirmed[63] and denied[64] that it is necessary to allege that accused practiced for compensation.

[§ 40] (cc) Pleas and Defenses. In a prosecution for practicing medicine without a license or certificate, a valid and unrevoked license or certificate, issued to accused and authorizing him to practice medicine in the state is a complete defense;[65] but a special plea in bar is insufficient where it avers only that accused presented to the board of medical examiners his diploma from a named school of osteopathy, together with the fee required by law.[66] In a prosecution for practicing chiropractics without a license, a license from either the medical or chiropractic board is a complete defense.[67] Matters held not to constitute defenses include discrimination against a particular class of practitioners,[68] the allowance of other persons, equally guilty, to escape,[69] the unlawful exclusion of accused from examination,[70] and the issuance of a charter or certificate of incorporation to certain incorporators, of whom defendant was one, authorizing the corporation to promote, teach, and practice a certain science in accordance with

[§ 41] (dd) Issues, Proof, and Variance. Evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint, indictment, or information is admissible,[72] but evidence which is not responsive to any issue in the case is not admissible,[73] and the only issue or question in the case is whether or not accused was practicing without a license or certificate.[74] Generally speaking, the allegations in the indictment or information must be substantiated by proof in order to warrant a conviction;[75] but, unless disproved by accused, a negative averment is taken as true where the subject matter thereof is peculiarly within his knowledge;[76] the subject matter of an averment which is surplusage need not be proved;[77] and it is not necessary to prove that the offense was committed on the precise date alleged.[78] It has been both affirmed[79] and denied[80] that, on an indictment or information for practicing medicine without a license from a specified board, the prosecution must show that such board was legally constituted. It is not incumbent upon the state to show that accused practiced medicine or treated diseases or disorders according to some particular system or method;[81] and although practice for compensation and reward is essential to guilt,[82] the state need not prove the actual receipt of such compensation.[83]

[§ 42] (ee) Evidence—aaa. Burden of Proof. The state has the burden of proving that accused practiced medicine or dentistry, as the case may be,[84] and defendant has the burden of proving that he had a license, certificate, or such other authority to practice as is required by law,[85] or that he was within an exception or exemption contained in the statute.[86]

[§ 43] bbb. Admissibility.[87] Any competent evidence having a material tendency to prove that accused did or did not practice the profession in question,[88] or that he did or did not have a license, cer-

(2) Evidence that accused told a witness that what he was doing would relieve him is admissible as tending to show that accused knowingly treated a disease from which the witness was suffering. Thompson v. State, 19 Ala. A. 328, 97 S 258. (3) Where accused claims to be a chiropractor, books and pamphlets descriptive of the chiropractic treatment are admissible. Swarts v. Siveny, 35 R. I. 1, 85 A 33. (4) Scope of proof under allegations of complaint or indictment see supra § 41.

[b] Prescribing or furnishing drugs or medicines.—(1) Evidence that accused prescribed for a witness is admissible (Singh v. State, 66 Tex. Cr. 156, 146 SW 891), (2) or at least prescriptions signed by accused are admissible if they were given to patients for the purpose of having the medicine prescribed taken (State v. Cornelius, 200 Iowa 309, 204 NW 222), (3) although they are not if they were merely in the nature of orders for medicines to be kept and used as required in a hospital where accused was employed (State v. Cornelius, supra). (4) The testimony of a chemist as to the results of his analysis of medicine furnished by accused to a patient is admissible for the purpose of establishing that accused furnished drugs to the patient in order to effect a cure of his ailment. Peo. v. Banks, 236 Mich. 8, 209 NW 935.

[c] Evidence that accused professed to cure (1) or held himself out as a medical practitioner, as in advertisements or by using the title "Dr.," "M.D.," or any other similar title in connection with his name, is admissible. tificate, or other required authority,[89] is admissible. Matters held inadmissible include the articles of incorporation of a church[90] or dental college;[91] the tenets of a church;[92] the mental attitude of complainant in making the complaint;[93] the conclusion of accused or of other witnesses that the acts done by him did not constitute the practice of medicine and surgery;[94] evidence as to whether the treatments given by accused were beneficial or harmful;[95] the treatment of the prosecuting witness by other physicians;[96] evidence that other physicians had no certificates;[97] evidence showing merely that accused had a right to obtain a license or certificate;[98] the injustice of the action of the state board in refusing to grant a certificate to accused;[99] evidence offered for the purpose of bringing the case within a statutory exception, but which, if received, would not do so;[1] and, in the absence of connecting evidence, evidence that accused had a credit on the books of a newspaper,[2] or evidence of a newspaper advertisement, disclosing his name, of a hospital or infirmary.[3] The court will not compel a witness to produce the medicine which he received from defendant.[4]

Compensation. Even though compensation may not be an essential element of the offense in the particular jurisdiction,[5] evidence that accused received payment for the treatments given or services rendered by him is admissible,[6] provided, in some jurisdictions, the payment was a part of the res gestæ of the treatment.[7] Accused is entitled to introduce evidence that the services were rendered by him without compensation.[8]

[§ 44] ccc. Weight and Sufficiency. Effect is accorded statutes under which certain records are prima facie evidence of the existence or nonexistence of a license,[9] or the use by a person of the title "Dr.," "Doctor," etc., or the exposure of a sign, circular, or advertisement, indicating his occupation to be that of a physician, is prima facie evidence that he is practicing medicine;[10] but aside from such statutory rules, the rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in criminal prosecutions generally[11] are controlling.[12]

[d] Acts done in another county.—Evidence that acts done by accused at the home of a patient in a county other than the one in which accused is being prosecuted, and having a tendency to prove that he was not merely selling medicines, but professed to treat and cure human ailments, is admissible for the purpose of characterizing the business in which he was engaged in the county in which he was being prosecuted. [§ 45] (ff) Trial. Where the evidence is sufficient to warrant the submission of the case to the jury,[13] it is for the jury to decide whether accused violated the statutes by practicing the profession in question without a license or certificate.[14] Also, where accused claims that he was doing acts within a statutory exception, the question whether he was doing so[15] in good faith[16] is one of fact for the jury. The withdrawal of one allegation of the indictment from the jury does not necessarily result in the withdrawal of another allegation not included in the former.[17]

Instructions. The instructions must conform to the pleadings[18] and the evidence,[19] correctly state the law,[20] and not be misleading.[21] It is not necessary for the court to instruct the jury as to the law of costs in case of acquittal;[22] nor is it necessary to give a requested instruction where the subject matter thereof is covered by another instruction given by the court.[23]

Affirmative charge should be given for accused where the undisputed evidence shows that he did not engage in the practice of the profession in question,[24] and, at least in some jurisdictions, it should be given for the state where the evidence is without conflict and it shows that accused engaged in the practice of the profession without a license or certificate,[25] but not where accused has introduced evidence tending to show that he has not performed any acts within the scope of the statutory prohibition.[26]

Verdict should be in proper form.[27]

[§ 46] (gg) Judgment, Sentence, Punishment, and Review. The punishment assessed must be within the minimum and maximum limits fixed by law,[28] or it must be for exactly the minimum where the applicable statute prescribes the minimum, but no maximum, punishment.[29] Imprisonment on default

State v. Erickson, 47 Utah 452, 456, 154 P 948. (4) Warrant a finding that accused held himself out as a practitioner of medicine contrary to statute. Com. v. Houtenbrink, 235 Mass. 320, 126 NE 669. (5) Justify a "finding that the defendant did not contract for the payment to him of the one hundred dollars either as the purchase-price of the material he furnished or as compensation for his service in applying it, but that the charge was essentially one for imparting his peculiar knowledge of its curative powers, and that the transaction therefore amounted to recommending a medicine for a fee within the letter and spirit of the law." State v. Huff, 75 Kan. 585, 592, 90 P 279, 12 LRANS 1094. (6) Authorize the jury to discredit accused's testimony showing prior practice bringing him within a statutory exemption. Ranald v. State, (Tex. Cr.) 47 SW 976. (7) Sustain a finding that a certain dental operation, the performance of which was not disputed, was performed by accused rather than by another person. State v. [a] Effect of statutory definition or absence thereof.—(1) Where the acts which shall constitute the practice of medicine are defined by statute, whether or not defendant has, by his conduct, brought himself within such definition, is a question for the jury. State v. Heath, 125 Iowa 585, 101 NW 429. (2) On the other hand, it is said that, where the statute does not declare what specific acts shall constitute "practicing medicine," or what it is to "publicly profess to do so," it is for the courts to determine whether the facts proved in a particular case bring it within the terms of the statute, taking these in the sense in which they are commonly understood. Springer v. District of Columbia, 23 App. (D. C.) 59 (so stating, but also holding that the charge of the court was a correct statement of the law and directly applicable to the evidence, and that a motion to direct a verdict for defendant was correctly overruled).

[b] Jury are not bound by a declaration, in a card signed by the patient's mother, that the services performed by accused were rendered as a matter of humanity and benevolence, but may properly find that the card and sale of medicine constituted a mere subterfuge and attempt to avoid the prohibition of the statute. [a] Special verdict.—Upon an indictment under a statute which makes it a misdemeanor for any person to practice medicine for fee or reward without a license, a special verdict which does not find that defendant practiced "for fee or reward" will not justify a conviction. of payment of a fine and costs may be ordered;[30] but a statute providing for imprisonment as punishment does not authorize a sentence to hard labor.[31] In some Canadian provinces the conviction should specify the particular act or acts which constituted the practicing.[32]

Review. A judgment of conviction based upon a revocation of defendant's license must, after the reversal of the revocation, be also reversed.[33] The admission of incompetent evidence which could not have harmed defendant is not reversible error.[34] Likewise, error in the instructions, which was in favor of accused, and therefore harmless as to him, is not ground for reversal.[35] Where the charge of the court is not in the record, it will be presumed that the jury were properly instructed as to the offense for which defendant was on trial.[36]

[§ 47] (hh) Effect of Conviction. Where the offense denounced by the statute is of such a continuous nature as to subject the violator to but one conviction for the whole period of time next before the institution of the prosecution, a conviction under one indictment is a bar to proceedings under other similar indictments for previous acts,[37] although each in itself constituted the practice of medicine.[38]

[§ 48] ee. Actions for Penalty for Practicing without License or Certificate.[39] In a few jurisdictions it is, or at times has been, provided by statute that a penalty for violation of a statute prohibiting the practice of medicine, dentistry, or veterinary medicine without a license or certificate may be sued for and recovered by a designated board, such as the state board of health or a state board of examiners.[40] An action to recover such a penalty is a civil suit,[41] rather than a criminal prosecution,[42] and it is not subject to the rules of pleading and procedure peculiar to criminal prosecutions.[43] A sufficient complaint or statement of claim,[44] together with proper and sufficient evidence,[45] is essential to a recovery.

Where action is tried before jury,[46] the instructions to the jury must be correct[47] and not misleading.[48] A verdict for plaintiff may be directed where the admitted facts conclusively show that defendant violated the statute as charged.[49]

Judgment. It is not the duty of the trial court to make recitals of facts in the judgment.[50] Under a statute providing penalties in different amounts for the first offense and subsequent offenses, a judgment upon a first conviction cannot exceed the amount limited by statute for the first offense.[51]

Review. A reviewing court may reverse the judgment for errors of law,[52] but it will not disturb conclusions of fact based upon conflicting evidence.[53]

[§ 49] (d) Right to, and Authority and Duty To Issue[54]—aa. In General. The granting of a license or certificate to practice medicine is an exercise of the police power of the state.[55] A license or certificate may be issued to,[56] and application therefor

43. Peo. v. Gartenstein, 248 Ill. 546, 94 NE 128.

[a] For example (1) an action of debt to recover the penalty is not a criminal proceeding in which the offense is required to be proved beyond a reasonable doubt (Peo. v. Klimek, 184 Ill. A. 59), (2) or in which the venue of the offense must be proved (Peo. v. McTier, 184 Ill. A. 635). (3) Also, it is not within a constitutional provision requiring all prosecutions to be carried on "in the name and by the authority of the People of the State of Illinois," and conclude, "against the peace and dignity of the same." Peo. v. Gartenstein, 248 Ill. 546, 550, 94 NE 128.

44. Steuben County v. Wood, 24 App. Div. 442, 48 NYS 471.

[a] It is sufficient (1) to employ the language of the statute in charging a violation thereof (Lowrie v. State Bd. of Registration, etc., 90 N. J. L. 54, 99 A 927; State Bd. of Medical Examiners v. O'Neill, (N. J. Sup.) 143 A 814), (2) without setting forth specific instances that may be relied upon as evidence of practice (Lowrie v. State Bd. of Registration, etc., supra).

[b] It is not sufficient to aver that defendant practiced veterinary medicine and surgery in violation of a specified statute. Steuben County v. Wood, 24 App. Div. 442, 48 NYS 471.

[c] It is not necessary to state the names of the persons treated by defendant or that such names are unknown. Peo. v. Dunn, 255 Ill. 289, 99 NE 577.

[d] Requiring or refusing to require more specific statement of claim is discretionary with the court. Peo. v. Dunn, 255 Ill. 289, 99 NE 577.

[a] Burden of proof.—The burden is on defendant to prove that he had a license. Peo. v. Klimek, 184 Ill. A. 59.

[b] Admissibility of evidence.—(1) Irrelevant and immaterial evidence is properly excluded. State Bd. of Medical Examiners v. De Young, (N. J. Sup.) 132 A 87. (2) A printed circular distributed by defendant from house to house and tending to support the charge of the commission of the offense is competent evidence. Peo. v. McTier, 184 Ill. A. 635. (3) However, where defendant has not introduced any oral testimony, a pamphlet, purporting to be signed by a third person and to be an exposition of the method of healing claimed by defendant to have been employed by him, is not admissible in his behalf. Peo. v. Trenner, 144 Ill. A. 275.

[c] Evidence held sufficient to: (1) Warrant a recovery, or, in other words, to show that defendant violated the statute. Peo. v. Dunn, 255 Ill. 289, 99 NE 577; Peo. v. Kane, 205 Ill. A. 32 [rev on other grounds 288 Ill. 235, 123 NE 265]; Peo. v. Brown, 202 Ill. A. 530; Peo. v. McTier, 184 Ill. A. 635; Peo. v. Powella, 176 Ill. A. 603; State Bd. of Medical Examiners v. L. 74, 131 A 89.

[d] Evidence held insufficient to establish that defendant, a licensed midwife, "used any drugs or medicine" in connection with her attendance upon another person during the period of the latter's confinement. Peo. v. Weding, 147 Ill. A. 59, 61.

may be made by,[57] a person desiring to practice any system of treatment; and the legislature may properly divide licenses or certificates into two classes, one for the practice of medicine in all its branches and the other for the treatment of human ailments, without the use of drugs and medicines and without operative surgery, by the system or method which applicant specifically designates in his application as the one he would undertake to practice;[58] but under a statute classifying different kinds of drugless healing, providing for the issuance of licenses or certificates for each kind and also authorizing the issuance of a license or certificate for any other separate and coördinate system of drugless practice, an applicant whose proposed practice falls within one of the specific classifications is not entitled to the issuance of a license describing the practice authorized by a name of his own choosing,[59] even though error may have been committed in granting other licenses under names not set forth in the statute.[60] It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that cancers, tumors, malignant growths, and cutaneous diseases are not so correlated that the treatment thereof cannot be classed as a special branch of medicine and surgery within the meaning of a statute providing for the issuance of a certificate to practice a special branch of medicine and surgery.[61]

Corporation cannot be licensed to practice medicine.[62]

[§ 50] bb. Qualifications of Applicant and Proof Thereof[63]—(aa) In General. It is competent for the legislature of a state not only to prescribe reasonable qualifications to be possessed by persons who desire to practice medicine and surgery,[64] chiropractics,[65] dentistry,[66] obstetrics,[67] or optometry[68] in the state, but also to provide reasonable means for ascertaining the existence of such qualifications[69] and to require an applicant for a license or certificate to furnish some substantial evidence of his qualifications.[70] Also, the legislature may raise the standard of qualification from time to time.[71] An applicant shown to possess the required qualifications is entitled to a license upon a proper and timely application therefor;[72] but a person who was qualified to receive a license or certificate under a certain statute is not entitled to a license or certificate thereunder upon an application made after its repeal.[73] A person holding a restricted license may acquire the qualifications for an unrestricted license precisely as other persons may.[74]

Person having established practice as a physician or dentist is not ipso facto exempt from complying with legislation prescribing a reasonable standard of qualification;[75] he may be required to conform to the same standard of qualification as a person contemplating practicing.[76]

[a] Impossibility of qualifying.—"The Legislature may prescribe qualifications, both as to character and learning, which will require those in practice to give up their occupation. . . . Legislation prescribing qualifications which a practitioner cannot meet because of conditions antedating the enactment of the legislation is valid. Such legislation does not constitute punishment; it

sion;[77] it may prescribe reasonable qualifications not only as to medical education,[78] but also as to preliminary or general education;[79] and while it may not require knowledge of a subject which bears no relation to the practice of medicine,[80] it may require an applicant for a license to possess knowledge of subjects deemed essential to the proper diagnosis and treatment of diseases,[81] and bearing a relation to the practice of medicine as a general science,[82] even though they may not be used by the followers of every school of medicine.[83] Likewise, the legislature may properly provide that before a person may be licensed to practice dentistry he shall have had a preliminary education equivalent to a four-year high school course,[84] and a professional education in a registered dental school[85] or partly in a medical, and partly in a dental, school.[86]

[§ 52] bbb. Graduation or Diploma. Statutes providing that an applicant for a license to practice medicine shall be a graduate of, or hold a diploma from, a reputable medical school in order to be eligible for a license, or to examination for a license,[87] or imposing a like requirement of a diploma from a dental college as a qualification for a license to practice dentistry,[88] are generally upheld as valid and constitutional, even though they also require an examination;[89] but particular statutes may be unconstitutional on account of discrimination in favor of the graduates of medical schools and against the graduates of schools teaching systems of treatment without the use of drugs, medicine, or operative surgery.[90] A statute requiring a diploma is not unconstitutional because it exempts persons engaged in practice at the time of the passage of the act[91] or who have practiced in the state a pre-

"Clearly the fact that an applicant for a license holds a diploma from a reputable dental college has a direct and substantial relation to his qualification to practice dentistry. We cannot say that the State is acting arbitrarily or unreasonably when, in the exercise of its judgment, it determines that the holding of such a diploma is a necessary qualification for the practice of dentistry; or that the distinction made in the granting of licenses between applicants who hold such diplomas and those who do not, is a classification which has no real or substantial basis. And the constitutionality of the statute must be sustained." Graves v. Minnesota, 272 U. S. 425, 429, 47 SCt 122, 71 L. ed. 331.

[a] Thus a statute is invalid where it requires a person desiring to practice without the use of drugs, medicine, or operative surgery to be a graduate of a professional school, college, or institution, teaching that system and requiring a four-year course of instruction as a prerequisite to graduation, but allows a person to be licensed to practice medicine and surgery in all their branches if he is a graduate of a medical school which is reputable and in good standing, regardless of whether it requires a two-year, three-year, or four-year course. scribed number of years;[92] and under a statute providing for the issuance of a license to such a practitioner upon his meeting certain prescribed requirements, not including the production of a diploma, he cannot be required to furnish a diploma.[93] Where both an examination[94] and a diploma or graduation[95] are required by a valid statute, an applicant must, to be entitled to take the examination, possess a diploma or be a graduate,[96] or show that he is within a statutory exemption.[97] Not only must the school or college which granted a diploma to applicant be such a legally chartered medical institution in good standing as comes within the terms and meaning of the particular statute,[98] but applicant must furnish satisfactory proof of that fact.[99] A diploma is not per se evidence of the fact;[1] and it is held that the existence of the college at the date of the diploma must be proved by producing its act of incorporation.[2]

Certificate of graduation from high school. Under a statute requiring an applicant for a license to practice medicine to furnish a certificate of graduation from an accredited high school, a certificate must comply with the law as to its contents,[3] and be made by an authorized person,[4] before it may be accepted. The certificate of graduation is the only evidence of premedical education which may be received.[5]

[§ 53] ccc. Examination.[6] The legislature of a state has power to make reasonable requirements[7] and regulations[8] as to the examination of applicants for licenses to practice medicine and surgery; provide for,[9] authorize,[10] and require[11] the examination of persons desiring to engage in the practice of a limited branch of medicine; require an applicant for a license to practice dentistry to take an examination,[12] even though he is also required to present a diploma from a dental college;[13] prescribe who shall be eligible to take an examination for a license to practice dentistry;[14] and prescribe the

95. See statutory provisions.

[a] Construction of statute.—A statute which, in clear and unambiguous language, requires both an examination and a diploma or a license from an institution which grants licenses upon actual examination will not be construed to entitle an applicant to a certificate upon his passing a satisfactory examination, without producing a diploma or license. Arwine v. Board of Medical Examiners, 151 Cal. 499, 503, 91 P 319 ("The language of the provision as to production of diploma or license is such as to necessarily make it applicable to every case, and no exception thereto is declared in any other part of the act. . . . A diploma or license coming up to the requirements of the act is essential in every case to the right to a certificate, however well qualified the applicant may be in other respects").

[b] Classification of statutes.—(1) While some statutes prescribing the professional qualifications for a license or certificate for the general and unlimited practice of medicine and surgery require, or at least early statutes required, only the passing of an examination, others require or required only the possession of a diploma, and still others require or required a diploma or the passing of an examination in the alternative, the majority of the modern statutes require both a diploma or graduation and the passing of an examination. See statutory provisions. (2) It must be borne in mind that the requirements in particular jurisdictions have been changed and made more rigid from time to time by statute (see statutory provisions), (3) and that the qualifications for a license or certificate to practice medicine and surgery generally are sometimes more onerous than the qualifications for a license or certificate to practice a branch of medicine or an allied profession (see statutory provisions).

Now in both professions it is merely a preliminary to examination." Peo. v. Somme, 120 App. Div. 20, 25, 104 NYS 946 [aff 190 N. Y. 541 mem, 83 NE 1128 mem].

98. See cases infra this note.

[a] Degree from institution approved by regents is necessary, under some statutes, to entitle a person to admission to examination. Peo. v. Somme, 120 App. Div. 20, 104 NYS 946 [aff 190 N. Y. 541 mem, 83 NE 1128 mem].

[b] Institution conducted without sanction of law in a particular state is not a regularly conducted school or college of osteopathy within the meaning of a statute requiring an applicant for a license to practice osteopathy to be a graduate of such a school or college. Peo. v. Reid, 135 App. Div. 89, 119 NYS 866.

[c] Word "reputable" (1) as used in the statutes, means "reputable" in the general sense in which the term is ordinarily used; worthy of repute or distinction; held in esteem; honorable; praiseworthy. State v. Chittenden, 127 Wis. 468, 107 NW 500; State v. Chittenden, 112 Wis. 569, 88 NW 587. (2) "The word 'reputable' is used in the statute in the sense of worthy of a good repute rather than as indicating the actual reputation which the institution had." Mower v. State Dept. of Health, (Conn.) 142 A 473, 475. (3) The reputability of a dental college relates to that which will enable the college to do good work, and the actual accomplishment. State v. Chittenden, supra.

[d] What is not "medical college."—A college which teaches osteopathy, a method of treating diseases by kneading or manipulation of the body, and does not teach surgery, bacteriology, materia medica, or therapeutics, is not a "medical college," within the meaning of a statute which requires the state board of health to issue a certificate to practice medicine to any reputable physician who has a diploma from a reputable medical college chartered under the laws of the state, or from a reputable and legally chartered medical college of some other state or country, indorsed as such by the state board of health. [a] Indorsement by dean in state.—Under a statute requiring a medical practitioner having a diploma from an institution in another state to obtain the indorsement thereon of the dean of some medical faculty within the state, the filing of a certificate made by the secretary of a medical faculty is not sufficient, even if the institution applied to refuses to indorse any diploma. In re Bauer, 2 Pa. Cas. 69, 4 A 913.

[c] Question of fact.—(1) Except to the extent, if any, that pertinent terms are defined by statute, the question whether a particular college is reputable or in good standing is not a legal question (Peo. v. Illinois State Bd. of Dental Examiners, 110 Ill. 180), (2) but is rather a question of fact (Peo. v. Illinois State Bd. of Dental Examiners, supra; State v. North, 316 Mo. 1050, 294 SW 1012).

subjects of examination of all persons who desire to practice medicine,[15] without limiting the subjects to those peculiar to particular treatments which an applicant for a license proposes to give.[16]

Failure to pass, and reëxamination.[17] Where the grade received by an applicant is less than the percentage prescribed by statute, he does not pass the examination;[18] and a statute providing that an applicant who fails to make the required grade in his first examination shall be entitled to a second examination does not give him a right to a further examination after he has taken and failed to pass two examinations.[19]

Exemption from examination.[20] A proviso to the effect that a person of a certain class, upon meeting certain requirements, not including an examination, shall be granted a license will be construed to exempt from examination a person who is within the class and meets the specified requirements.[21] Sometimes a statute relating to the practice of medicine, dentistry, optometry, osteopathy, or veterinary medicine and surgery provides for the granting of a license without examination to a person who is engaged in the practice of the profession in question at the time of the passage of the act[22] or has been engaged in it for a prescribed period prior thereto.[23] In order to come within such a statute a person must have been actually[24] and legally[25] engaged in the practice of the profession in question at the prescribed time or for the prescribed period. Some,[26] but not other,[27] statutes of this nature are limited to residents of the state. Other statutes provide, subject to certain conditions, for the granting of a license without examination to a person who has been licensed in another jurisdiction;[28] and a license may and should be granted without examination under such statutes when and only when there is a fulfillment of the prescribed conditions,[29] such as the existence of requirements in the jurisdiction wherein the first license was granted, which are at least equal or equivalent to those obtaining in the jurisdiction wherein it is sought to procure the second license,[30] and practice by applicant in the jurisdiction of his residence for a prescribed period immediately prior to the date of his application.[31] Under the construction placed upon a few statutes, the indorsement, without examination of applicant, of a license issued in another jurisdiction is discretionary.[32] A statute providing for the issuance of a license without examination to any graduate of a recognized college who has passed an examination for admission to the medical corps of the army, navy, and public health services of the United States is valid;[33] and a statute recognizing different systems of treating human ailments, one of which is the practice of medicine and surgery in all their branches, and providing for separate and distinct examinations and licenses for each, is not unconstitutional on the ground that it discriminates against the chiropractor and in favor of the general practitioner by allowing the latter to practice chiropractics without examination.[34] Where a statute limits the time for applying for a license or certificate without examination, an application must be made within the time fixed in order to exempt the applicant from examination;[35] but the statute will not be given a strict construction where such construction would call for the making of application before the time fixed by law for the organization and first meeting of the board of ex-

23. See statutory provisions.

[a] Construction of statute.—A statute, providing that all persons who have made the practice of medicine and surgery their profession or business continuously for ten years within the state shall receive a license to continue the practice, is construed to exempt from examination only persons who have practiced for ten years prior to the passage of the statute. [a] Meager practice (1) consisting of the treatment of a few patients, during the prescribed five-year period, may not be sufficient to constitute continuous practice for the full period and thereby bring applicant within the exemption from examination (State v. Upham, 116 Oh. St. 606, 157 NE 20), (2) especially where, during that period, he has been engaged in another occupation as an employee (State v. Upham, supra).

[b] Practice as student.—(1) The language employed in a statute providing that persons engaged in the practice of osteopathy in the state at the time of the approval of the act shall be entitled to receive licenses without examination must be interpreted according to the popular meaning of the words employed, and as so interpreted the statute exempts from examination persons actually engaged in the practice of osteopathy at the time of the approval of the act, not as students in a school, but as regular graduate practitioners holding themselves out to the public as duly qualified practitioners of osteopathy. In re Osteopathic Students, 36 Pa. Co. 268, 12 Dauph. Co. 127. (2) Likewise, studying optometry at night, and occasionally assisting another person in the practice of optometry, is not the practice of optometry within a statute providing for exemption from examination for a certificate to practice optometry of a person who has been continuously engaged in the practice of optometry for at least a specified period next preceding a designated date. [§ 54] (cc) Prior Practice.[37] Practice of such a character,[38] and at or for such a time,[39] together with such proof thereof,[40] as is prescribed by statute,[41] and the existence and proof of such other qualifications, if any, as are prescribed by statute,[42] are necessary and sufficient to entitle a person to a license or certificate under a statute providing for the granting thereof to a person who was engaged in practice at or before the date of the passage of the act or other specified date. Where proofs are filed within the time limited by statute, defects therein may be corrected by other proofs filed after the expiration of the statutory period.[43]

[§ 55] (dd) Good Moral Character.[44] The legislature has the same power to require, as a condition of the right to practice the profession, that applicant shall be possessed of the qualifications of honor and a good moral character, as it has to require that he shall be learned in the profession;[45] and when so required by statute, satisfactory proof of his good moral character must be produced by an applicant to entitle him to a license or certificate.[46] Some statutes requiring such proof apply to every applicant,[47] including an applicant for a reciprocity certificate;[48] but other statutes are construed not to apply to a certain class of applicants.[49] The moral character required of a physician by such statutes covers a broader sphere of conduct than that relating specifically to his profession.[50]

[§ 56] cc. Boards or Officers—(aa) In General. The legislature of a state has power to vest in an officer, board, or department authority and duty to ascertain and determine, by examination or otherwise, the qualifications of applicants for licenses or certificates to practice medicine in the state;[51] to grant licenses or certificates to applicants found to be qualified;[52] and, upon proper grounds, and after the taking of proper proceedings, to revoke a license or certificate.[53] For this purpose, the legislature may create a state board of medical examiners[54] and fix its powers and duties.[55] Likewise, the legislature may vest in an officer or board authority to determine whether applicants for licenses or certificates to practice dentistry in the state possess the required qualifications;[56] and it may either prescribe a test and authorize the board to conduct an examination,[57] or it may, without stating the scope and character of the examination, authorize the board to determine the subjects of examination[58] and the necessary extent of knowledge of each subject.[59]

[§ 57] (bb) Membership and Organization of Board. A statute creating a state medical board or board of medical examiners to be composed of members of a particular school of medicine is not unconstitutional;[60] nor is an act unconstitutional in not providing that each school of medicine shall be represented by equal numbers on the board;[61] and where the statute does not require that the different schools of medicine shall be represented on the board, its composition cannot affect its jurisdiction[62] or the legality of its acts.[63] Also, a statute providing that a majority of the members of the board shall be members of some medical society incorporated by the state is not unconstitutional.[64] The fact that the board was not regularly organized is immaterial;[65] if it is the de facto board its certificate pro-

[a] Reputable and honorable practice.—A particular statute providing for the granting of certificates to persons who have been reputably and honorably engaged in the practice of medicine in the state prior to a specific date is intended to apply to physicians who, not possessing a diploma from a reputable and legally chartered medical college, indorsed as such by the state board of health, have been in practice a sufficient length of time prior to the specified date, and with sufficient success, to have acquired an honorable reputation in the community as practitioners. Board of chiropractic examiners. A statute dealing with the membership of a state board of chiropractic examiners is construed in connection with other related statutes to require each member to be the holder of a license or certificate to practice.[67]

Board of dental examiners. In a statute providing for the appointment of a state dental commission consisting of a specified number of persons, each of whom shall be a graduate of a reputable dental college and shall have been in the legal and reputable practice of dentistry in the state at least a specified number of years next preceding his appointment, the use of the word "reputable" does not render the statute unconstitutional.[68]

Board of veterinary examiners. A statute providing that no two members of a board of veterinary medical examiners shall be graduates of the same school does not preclude the appointment of a member who is a graduate of the same school as another member if he is also a graduate of some other school.[69] A board which has at least a de facto existence is a legal board from which a license or certificate to practice may be obtained.[70]

Superseded board. A statute providing for a state board of medical examiners to be composed in part of osteopathic physicians and authorized to issue various certificates, including certificates to practice osteopathy, has the effect of supplanting an earlier statute providing for a board of examiners to be composed wholly of osteopaths and authorized to issue certificates to practice osteopathy.[71]

[§ 58] (cc) Authority, Powers, and Duties[72]—aaa. In General. The powers of a state board vested with authority to grant licenses or certificates for the practice of medicine and surgery, or limited branches thereof, and to determine the qualifications of applicants therefor, extend and are limited to such express powers as are conferred upon it by statute,[73] and such implied powers as are necessary to carry into effect the express powers conferred and duties enjoined upon it by statute.[74] A board of examiners charged by law with the independent duty of ascertaining the qualifications of an applicant for a license is without authority to shift its responsibility to any medical or other association.[75] Also, an existing board has no power to review the action of a former board.[76]

Nature of authority. While a state officer, board, or department exercises a certain measure of judgment and discretion in granting or refusing licenses or certificates to practice medicine, dentistry, or osteopathy and in determining questions of fact as to the qualifications of applicants for licenses or certificates,[77] nevertheless the authority conferred upon, and exercised by the officer, board, or department is not legislative[78] or judicial,[79] but is rather executive, administrative, or ministerial,[80] or, at the most, is only quasi-judicial.[81]

Rules and regulations.[82] A state board of medical or dental examiners may prescribe reasonable

[a] Failure to appoint members within time limited.—Failure of the governor to appoint the members of a board of medical examiners within one month after the passage of the act creating such board, as required thereby, does not invalidate the appointments subsequently made, since the requirement as to time is merely directory. Peo. v. Hasbrouck, 11 Utah 291, 39 P 918.

[b] Failure to notify member of time and place of organization.—Under an act to regulate the practice of medicine, which does not impose on any member of the board of medical examiners the duty of notifying the others of the time and place of organization of the board, a failure to give such notice to a member will not afford sufficient ground to restrain the board, when organized, from discharging its proper functions under the law as a board of examiners. 82. Rules and regulations as to:
Graduation from college of certain rules and regulations as to its procedure,[83] the conduct of its work,[84] and the examination of applicants for,[85] and the grant or issuance of,[86] licenses or certificates. However, rules and regulations promulgated by the board or department are subject to judicial review as to their reasonableness.[87] It is beyond the power of the board to adopt a regulation requiring the taking of an examination by members of a profession not within the scope of the statute;[88] but a conflict between a rule of the board and a statute relative to the time of making an application for examination cannot be urged by the board in proceedings to compel it to license an applicant whose application was filed within the time permitted by the rule and rejected on another ground.[89]

Reciprocal agreement. Notwithstanding a reciprocal agreement by a board of examiners with a board of another state for the granting of licenses without examination, it is necessary for an applicant who has practiced in the other state to pass an examination where the agreement is invalid,[90] or, if it is valid, where he has not complied with its conditions.[91]

Duties as to examination. Where a statute prescribes the place, but not the date, of an examination, it is the duty of the board to fix a reasonable time therefor;[92] but when not so provided by statute, it is not the duty of the board to furnish means for examining an applicant as to his fitness to treat patients by a particular system of drugless healing.[93] In a statute prescribing the subjects of examination and providing that the board shall grant a certificate when it is satisfied as to the qualifications of an applicant, the term "qualifications of an applicant" refers to his knowledge of the subjects enumerated in the statute.[94]

Consideration of evidence. Where, in determining the qualifications of an applicant for a license, the board is not in any way limited by statute to any particular kind or character of proof, it possesses power to determine questions of fact upon such evidence as will satisfy the minds of members of the board as to whether or not applicant for a license is qualified as required by law and the rules of the board.[95] Even where the statute provides for the filing of an affidavit as to certain facts, the affidavit is not conclusive upon the board,[96] and where it is not satisfied as to the truth of the affidavit it not only may inquire into the matter[97] and receive and consider other evidence,[98] but it is its duty to make a reasonably prompt investigation[99] and satisfy itself one way or the other.[1] However, where the board is satisfied as to the truth of the affidavit, it is its duty to issue a license.[2] A board is without authority to accept the fact of membership in an association as conclusive evidence that applicant possesses the qualifications required by law.[3]

Rehearing need not be granted by the board to an applicant for a license where he has had a hearing and his application has been rejected,[4] even though no notice of the action of the board has been sent to him,[5] or, where the board's records otherwise show the rejection of the application, even though the formal written decision of the board has been lost or misplaced.[6]

Fees may be collected by a board of examiners[7] and expended for the payment of salaries, costs, and expenses,[8] in accordance with the terms of the governing statute[9] and the intent thereof to make the board self-sustaining.[10] Under the construction placed upon some statutes, the fees collected by the board may be retained by it,[11] but under the express terms of other statutes the fees are, intermediate their collection and disbursement, to be deposited in a special fund in the state treasury,[12] and the balance, if any, in the fund at the close of a fixed period is to be transferred to the general revenue fund of the state.[13] In the absence of statutory requirement a fee need not be returned to an applicant who has had the benefit of an examination or

[§ 59] bbb. As to Educational Requirements. Whether a particular medical or dental school or college is reputable or in good standing within the meaning of a statute requiring an applicant for a license or certificate to be a graduate or hold a diploma from a reputable institution, or institution in good standing, is usually a question of fact[15] left to the judgment and discretion of the state board of examiners;[16] but where the status of such schools and colleges is fixed by statute, the board of examiners has no discretion in regard to determining their reputability.[17] The discretion of the board in this respect is a reasonable,[18] rather than an arbitrary,[19] one, and when the board has once determined the question in favor of an applicant, it cannot refuse him a license for arbitrary reasons of its own.[20] The board may adjudicate the status of a medical college as to reputability either of its own motion, or on petition of the college;[21] and where the law does not define the method by which the board shall proceed to determine the reputability of a college, it may perform its duty in that regard in any reasonable way it may deem proper.[22] The board may properly prescribe certain minimum requirements for medical colleges,[23] adopt a rule providing that colleges meeting such requirements shall be deemed reputable,[24] and, according to some authorities, it may determine, upon proper investigation, that a college which does not meet the requirements is not in good standing,[25] or it may promulgate and enforce a rule that only graduates of medical colleges whose standard of excellence is denominated as class A by the American Medical Association will be permitted to take an examination;[26] but, according to other authorities, it may not provide in advance that it will not examine a person unless he presents a diploma from a medical college which conforms to a certain standard.[27] Where graduation from a recognized dental school is not required by statute as a qualification for a license or certificate to practice dentistry, a rule or regulation of the state board of dentistry making such a requirement may be changed at will,[28] or suspended in a particular case,[29] by the board. The board may not adopt a rule relating to medical colleges which is beyond the powers conferred upon it by statute;[30] nor has it power to interfere with the internal management of medical or dental colleges;[31] and where it is without statutory authority to grant a person a certificate to practice medicine and surgery upon presentation of his diploma from an association of naturopaths, it cannot do so indirectly by recognizing his certificate to practice naturopathy as one entitling him to practice medicine and surgery.[32]

[§ 60] ccc. To Refuse License or Certificate for Cause. Boards are sometimes authorized by statute to refuse licenses or certificates to applicants guilty of unprofessional or dishonorable conduct,[33]

State v. State Medical Examining Bd., 32 Minn. 324, 20 NW 238, 50 AmR 575. (2) In a statute authorizing, in one subdivision, the refusal of a license to practice medicine for a conviction of a crime of the grade of a felony, or one which involves moral turpitude, or procuring or aiding or abetting the procuring of a criminal abortion, and authorizing, in a subsequent subdivision, the refusal of a license for "other grossly unprofessional or dishonorable conduct of a character likely to deceive or defraud the public," the use of the word "other," in the clause quoted, indicates a legislative intent that the conduct referred to therein should be or gross malpractice;[34] but an applicant who possesses the requisite professional qualifications cannot be denied a license or certificate without a hearing on the question of his character and conduct;[35] and a statute which mandatorily requires the board to refuse a certificate and does not provide for or require notice and a hearing is unconstitutional.[36] A statute providing that the state board of examiners may refuse a certificate to any person upon palpable evidence of incompetency may be applicable where a prior practitioner applies for a certificate;[37] and under such a statute the board has power to inquire into the competency of an applicant.[38]

[§ 61] (dd) Judicial Review of Decisions.[39] State medical or dental laws sometimes authorize an appeal to a designated court from the action of a board of examiners in refusing a license or certificate to an applicant;[40] and in a case within such a statute applicant has a right to an appeal[41] and to a hearing thereon[42] as to the merits of his claim,[43] unless the particular statute under which the appeal is taken is construed to limit the scope of the investigation on appeal to the fairness and legality of the action of the board.[44] Where a statute authorizes an appeal, its failure to prescribe the manner of taking or perfecting it does not affect the right thereto;[45] but a right of appeal conferred by one statute may not be available to a class of applicants whose rights are conferred by another distinct statute.[46] Pending an appeal from a refusal to grant a license, the court has no power to allow applicant to practice.[47] Notice of the appeal should be served upon a member of the board,[48] and where the notice so served is sufficient, it is immaterial whether the board is or is not represented at the trial or hearing,[49] unless it is required by statute to be represented by the attorney-general and the proper prosecuting attorney.[50] The board, when aggrieved by the decision of the court, may move for a new trial,[51] or, under statutes authorizing a further appeal,[52] may appeal to a higher court.[53] When no appeal is provided for by statute, the medical or dental board, in passing on a question within its jurisdiction calling for the exercise of judgment, is supreme so long as it proceeds to a reasonable conclusion on evidence bearing on such question.[54]

On certiorari, the rules limiting the scope of review generally[55] are applicable;[56] the review is limited to the questions of whether the board kept within its jurisdiction[57] and regularly pursued its authority,[58] and does not extend to errors of law[59] or mistakes in findings of facts.[60] The court cannot direct the granting of a license,[61] even though allegations in the petition as to the qualifications of the petitioner are not denied;[62] if it finds that the board exceeded its jurisdiction, or failed regularly to exercise its authority, it is its duty to remand the cause to the board for a rehearing.[63]

Decision as to standing of college. The decision of the board as to whether a professional school or college is reputable or in good standing will not be coerced or reversed by the courts,[64] unless the board acts arbitrarily, oppressively, or unfairly,[65] or, in other words, the decision of the board will receive judicial sanction where it is reasonable[66] and clearly within the purview of its powers.[67] In a statutory action to compel a board to approve a particular medical school, evidence of the quality of the course of instruction given by the school is

[§ 62] (e) Sufficiency. Under a statute requiring a license from some chartered school, state board of medical examiners, or medical society, neither a certificate showing that the holder has passed a limited course of study,[69] nor a commission for the practice of medicine within a limited sphere,[70] is sufficient, and under a statute requiring a license from a state board or like agency, a medical school diploma conferring the title "M.D." cannot serve as a license to practice medicine.[71] Also, a receipt for money paid by an applicant as an examination fee is not a license.[72] Where a statute requiring an applicant to obtain a license or certificate further requires that such license or certificate shall be indorsed or countersigned by a particular officer before it shall become valid, a license or certificate not so indorsed or countersigned is insufficient to authorize the holder to practice medicine.[73]

[§ 63] (f) Operation and Effect. A license to practice medicine, drugless healing, dentistry, or optometry is not a contract,[74] but is rather a grant by the state of a privilege[75] or franchise[76] usable at the option of the licensee.[77] It is sometimes said that the right conferred by the license is a property right,[78] but in other cases it is said that strictly speaking it is neither a personal[79] nor a property[80] right, although it partakes in a measure of the nature of both.[81] At any rate the license does not confer a vested right upon the holder thereof.[82]

Conclusiveness. A proper license or certificate is conclusive evidence of the right to practice conferred thereby;[83] but a directory of persons holding licenses to practice in the state, compiled and published by the board of examiners under statutory authority, and indicating the form of license or certificate held by each person listed in the directory, is not conclusive upon the courts as to the scope of the right of a person listed in the directory.[84]

Territorial operation. Under some statutes a license will entitle the holder to practice throughout the state,[85] but in a few jurisdictions, the obtaining of a license or certificate,[86] or the recording thereof,[87] in the county where applicant or the holder resides or intends to practice is, or at times has been, required by statute.

Nature of practice permitted in general.[88] In a majority of jurisdictions a person holding a license or certificate to practice medicine and surgery, or to treat human diseases generally, has unlimited authority to prescribe for and treat the sick and afflicted,[89] practice the profession in all its branches,[90] and use any method or system of treatment or healing he may choose,[91] including the chiropractic system;[92] but under the statutes of a few jurisdictions, he is not entitled to practice osteopathy.[93] In some jurisdictions it is held that a person holding a license to practice medicine and surgery may practice dentistry without obtaining a license or certificate as a dentist,[94] where he does not advertise himself as a dentist;[95] but in other jurisdictions it is held that he may not do so,[96] or at least he may not perform dental work not falling within an express statutory exception in his favor.[97]

License or certificate to practice without drugs or surgery generally. As used in a statute providing for the issuance of two forms of certificates, one designated as a "physician and surgeon certificate" and authorizing the holder to sever or penetrate the tissues of human beings, and another designated as a "drugless practitioner certificate" and authorizing the holder to treat diseases, injuries, and deformities without in any manner severing or penetrating any of the tissues of human beings,[98] the word "sever" means severance by cutting with a knife,[99] and therefore the statute is not unconstitutional on the ground that, as it is impossible to practice osteopathy, chiropractics, or mechanotherapy without severing tissues in the course of manipulation and adjustment, it in effect prohibits the practice of such systems.[1] Under some statutes the recipient of a license for the treatment of human ailments without the use of drugs or medicine and without operative surgery is restricted to the use of the method or system designated in his application as the one he desires to practice.[2]

License or certificate to practice osteopathy.[3] The holder of a license or certificate to practice osteopathy is, of course, entitled to practice osteopathy,[4] or, in other words, to diagnose diseases[5] and treat them according to the principles of osteopathy.[6] On the other hand, his authority is limited to the practice of "osteopathy"[7] as the term was understood at the time of the passage of the statute providing for the issuance of the license or certificate;[8] and the practice of osteopathy authorized is confined to manipulation by applying only the hands to the body of the patient;[9] he has no right to give electrical treatments,[10] or, generally speaking, to practice medicine and surgery,[11] even though medicine and surgery, or branches thereof, are taught in colleges of osteopathy;[12] but it is recognized that the practice of osteopathy and the practice of medicine and surgery overlap to a certain extent;[13] and it is held that a licensed osteopath is authorized and entitled to practice obstetrics.[14] A license or certificate to practice osteopathy does not entitle the holder to practice optometry;[15] he is not within a provision, in a statute relating to optometry, that nothing contained therein shall apply to licensed physicians and surgeons or prevent them from testing eyes and fitting glasses.[16] However, it is held that a person practicing osteopathy is a regular practicing physician within an exception of regular practicing physicians from the operation of a statute relating to the practice of podiatry.[17]

License to practice chiropractics. A licensed chiropractor exceeds his authority when he gives electrical treatments.[18]

Certificate to practice naturopathy. A holder of a certificate to practice naturopathy is limited in his treatment to his particular system,[19] and is without any right or authority to engage in the general practice of medicine and surgery.[20]

License to practice dentistry. A person licensed to practice dentistry keeps within his authority when he cleanses and treats cancer of the mouth.[21]

License to maintain dental parlor. A person holding a license to conduct, manage, or maintain a dental parlor may furnish and maintain an office and appliances for the practice of dentistry,[22] and employ competent and licensed dentists to carry on such practice,[23] but may not himself engage in the actual practice of dentistry without obtaining a license for that purpose.[24]

[§ 64] (g) Suspension or Revocation[25]—aa. In General. The revocation of a dentist's or physician's license is an exercise of the police power,[26] and in some jurisdictions it is deemed to be in the nature of a remedial measure[27] for the protection of the public,[28] and not to be punishment[29] or a penalty[30] or forfeiture,[31] but in other jurisdictions statutes providing for the suspension or revocation of a license are deemed to be highly penal[32] so as to come within the general rule requiring a strict construction of penal statutes;[33] and a revocation of a license is of course a part of the punishment where it is required by statute to be added to the other penalty or penalties imposed upon a physician convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude.[34]

Delegation of power.[35] The Legislature has power to invest an officer, board, or department with the power and duty to hear, investigate, and determine a complaint or charge against a person holding a license or certificate to practice medicine, drugless healing, dentistry, or optometry in the state,[36] and to revoke the license or certificate[37] for any one of certain enumerated causes.[38] Most statutes providing for the revocation of licenses are held to be free from constitutional objections,[39] but a few have been held void for uncertainty,[40] discrimination,[41] or as not affording due process of law.[42] A board or department has such power and jurisdiction as to the revocation of a license or certificate as are conferred upon it by a valid statute.[43] Under a few constitutional or statutory provisions a designated court has jurisdiction to annul, cancel, or revoke a license or certificate to practice medicine,[44] at least in certain cases,[45] as where the issuance of the license or certificate resulted from fraud,[46] perjury,[47] or error of the board,[48] or the licensee has been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude.[49] The fact that a license is issued to one not entitled to it will not prevent the board from revoking it.[50]

Licenses or certificates issued prior to statute. Some,[51] but not other,[52] statutes providing for the revocation of licenses or certificates are construed to apply retroactively so as to authorize the revocation of licenses or certificates issued before their passage. An express provision in the statute that it shall not apply to persons lawfully engaged in practice at the time of its enactment is held to be unconstitutional as discriminating between persons of the same class.[53]

In Ontario the statutory power of the Royal College of Dental Surgeons to pass by-laws carries with it implied power to impose the penalty of suspension or cancellation of license for violation of a by-law prohibiting a licensed dentist from practicing his profession as an employee of an unlicensed person or corporation.[54]

Nature of power; not arbitrary. The board or department is not vested with arbitrary power;[55] nor is its power judicial,[56] but is rather executive, administrative, or ministerial,[57] or, at the most, quasi-judicial.[58] Sometimes a certain measure of discretion is vested in the board,[59] but the board has no discretion in a case within a statute expressly making it the duty of the board to revoke a license or certificate.[60]

Reference to committee. Also a few statutes provide that, on the filing of a complaint against the holder of a license, a committee shall be appointed to hear and determine the charges against him.[61]

[a] Conferring judicial power upon board.—(1) As the power to revoke licenses granted to a board is not judicial (see infra text and note 56), (2) the statutes are not unconstitutional on the ground that they confer judicial power upon the board (Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 187 P 965; Peo. v. Apfelbaum, 251 Ill. 18, 95 NE 995; State v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 34 Minn. 387, 26 NW 123; State Bd. of Health v. Roy, 22 R. I. 538, 48 A 802).

[a] Statutes construed.—(1) A particular statute conferring powers upon a state dental board was construed generally to empower the board to revoke a certificate of registration in certain cases, to revoke both a license and a certificate of registration in other cases, and to revoke either a license or certificate of registration in still other cases. State v. Missouri Dental Bd., 282 Mo. 292, 221 SW 70. (2) As applied to the case in hand, it was held that, upon charges of deceitful advertising, the statute empowered the board to revoke either the offender's license or his certificate of registration, but not both. State v. Missouri Dental Bd., supra [foll State v. Wolfe, 283 Mo. 29, 222 SW 441]. A. 274 [rev on other grounds 118 Ill. 444, 8 NE 841].

[b] Bias and prejudice.—(1) In the absence of a statute so providing, bias or prejudice on the part of members of a board of medical examiners does not affect the jurisdiction of the board to revoke a license to practice medicine. [a] Eligibility for membership.—A hospital offering medical instruction is a "medical institution" within is competent for the legislature of a state to declare the acts or conduct for which a license to practice medicine or dentistry in the state may be revoked,[62] the acts or conduct should be designated in the statute with certainty and definiteness[63] and be such as affect the health, morals, or safety of the community.[64] Generally speaking, the power of an officer or board to revoke the license of a physician or dentist is confined to the causes or grounds set forth in the statute conferring the power,[65] but it is said that, in addition to the express powers of revocation conferred upon it, a board has inherent power to revoke a license obtained from it by fraud.[66] Each ground of revocation specified by statute is sufficient in itself to warrant revocation.[67]

[§ 66] (bb) Advertising.[68] A statute providing for the revocation of the license of a physician for advertising under a name other than his own, whether that of another physician or not, and without regard to his motive, is not unconstitutional,[69] and it is not so inconsistent with a subsequent statute making it an offense for a physician, for fraudulent purposes, to practice under the name of another physician or to hold himself out as another physician, as to be repealed thereby.[70] Also, a statute, authorizing the state board of medical examiners to revoke a license to practice medicine for publicly advertising special ability to treat or cure chronic and incurable diseases, is not invalid because of indefiniteness.[71] On the other hand, a statute conferring power on the state dental board to revoke a license for advertising with a view of deceiving the public,[72] or for publishing or circulating any fraudulent or misleading statement as to the skill or method of any person or operator,[73] is void for uncertainty and indefiniteness. It has been affirmed in some jurisdictions,[74] and denied in others,[75] that a statute authorizing the revocation of the license of a physician for causing the publication and circulation of an advertisement relative to any disease of the sexual organs is within the scope of the police power. When not specifically made so by statute, advertising by a physician is not ground for revocation of his license,[76] unless the circumstances are such as to bring the case within a statute providing for revocation on the ground of unprofessional or dishonorable conduct.[77] The giving of a receipt to a patient after work has been done for him is not advertising within the meaning of a statute;[78] nor is advertising to do dental work with minimum pain,[79] or to extract teeth without pain,[80] within a statute authorizing the revocation of a license for advertising to practice dentistry without pain.

[§ 67] (cc) Error in Issuance of License or Certificate. In a statute providing for the annulment or revocation of a certificate where its issuance resulted from error of the board, the word "error" is used as meaning jurisdictional error[81] or error which might properly be denominated "jurisdictional" when occurring on a trial before a quasi-judicial body.[82] A license erroneously issued to a person who does not reside, and does not contemplate personally practicing his profession, in the state may be revoked.[83]

[§ 68] (dd) Fraud, Deceit, or Misrepresentation.[84] The statutes of a number of jurisdictions provide for the revocation of a license or certificate to practice medicine or dentistry on the ground of a statute providing that the members of a professional committee hearing charges for the revocation of a license shall not be interested in any medical college or institution. Ramsay v. Shelton, 329 Ill. 432, 160 NE 769.

[b] New committee for each proceeding.—(1) Where a committee appointed under the statute met, heard the charges, dismissed the proceedings, and disbanded, the appointment of a new committee is necessary before any other or further action can be taken relative to the revocation of the license of the same or any other physician. State v. Maybury, (Wash.) 272 P 720. (2) Effect of former adjudication generally see infra § 78.

[a] Test of uncertainty.—The courts cannot uphold and enforce a statute whose broad and indefinite language may apply, not only to a particular act about which there would be little or no difference of opinion, but equally to others about which there might be radical differences, thereby devolving upon the tribunals charged with the enforcement of the law the exercise of an arbitrary power of discriminating between the several classes of acts. 72. Green v. Blanchard, 138 Ark. 137, 211 SW 375, 5 ALR 84; Ex p. Craycroft, 24 OhNPNS 513.

[a] Reason for rule.—It is "a matter of opinion whether any given advertisement was done 'with a view of deceiving the public.' . . . No rule is provided whereby an advertising dentist can tell whether or not the publication he makes will bring him within the ban of the law's provision. If, in the judgment of the board, such statements are made with the view of deceiving the public, then the dentist's right to practice is forfeited. Instead of furnishing some standard by which the dentists may determine in advance what statements the board will treat as being of a character to deceive the public, it leaves that important matter in nubibus; yet the law provides that after the dentist has issued the advertisement, an ex post facto judgment of the board shall determine whether the dentist's statement is made with the view of deceiving the public, and whether or not the dentist has been guilty of any grossly immoral conduct likely to deceive or defraud the public, or whether the advertisement is of such a nature as to disqualify the applicant to practice with safety to the people." 80. Harris v. Sims, 118 S. C. 1, 109 SE 411.

[a] Reasons for rule.—"The practice of dentistry includes numerous separate and distinct branches and operations. Some of the branches are conducted without pain, and some of the operations in a branch that is fraught with pain may be performed without pain. To lay claim 'to practice dentistry without pain' is universally inclusive in its character, embracing all branches and all operations, and comes within the inhibition of the statute. To profess to conduct a certain branch of dentistry, or a certain operation in a branch without pain, is not only not within the inhibition of the statute, but is susceptible of absolute demonstration as a fact. . . . It is a fact which a judicial utterance cannot make otherwise, that in the advance of the science the process of extracting teeth is daily accomplished without pain or consciousness of the fact. The fact that pain may follow the operation does not at all negative the fact that the extraction was painless." Harris v. Sims, 118 S. C. 1, 3, 109 SE 411.

fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation in obtaining it[85] or in the practice of the profession.[86] Such statutes are within the limits of the police power[87] and are not invalid for uncertainty.[88] It is said that a board has general inherent power to revoke a license obtained from it by fraud.[89]

[§ 69] (ee) Guilt or Conviction of Crime. The statutes of different jurisdictions variously provide for the revocation of the license of a physician who has been guilty of a felony,[90] practiced criminal abortion,[91] or has been convicted of any crime,[92] or of any crime[93] or felony[94] involving moral turpitude.

[§ 70] (ff) Practice under Forbidden Name or Title. Even though practicing under a name other than his own is unlawful on the part of a physician,[95] it is not ground for revocation of his license when not so provided by statute.[96] On the other hand, where the case is within a statute providing for revocation on this ground, the license of a dentist may be revoked for practicing dentistry under a name other than his own,[97] and the certificate of an optometrist may be suspended or revoked for using the title "Doctor" or "Dr." as a prefix to his name.[98]

[§ 71] (gg) Practice without Authority. Where a person holding a license or certificate to practice osteopathy, naturopathy, or drugless healing generally goes beyond the scope of his license or certificate[99] and engages in the general unlicensed practice of medicine and surgery, his license or certificate may revoked.[1]

Aiding and abetting. A statute providing for the revocation or suspension of the license of a dentist for aiding and abetting an unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully is valid.[2] For a case to be within such a statute, it is necessary and sufficient that an unlicensed person shall be practicing dentistry,[3] and that a licensed dentist, with guilty knowledge,[4] shall do some act which renders aid to the other in his unlawful practice.[5]

[§ 72] (hh) Unprofessional, Dishonorable, or Immoral Conduct. The most common statutory grounds for revocation or suspension of the license or certificate of a physician, dentist, or chiropractor are unprofessional, dishonorable, or immoral conduct.[6] Similar grounds prescribed by the statutes of some jurisdictions are gross immorality,[7] malpractice,[8] gross violation of professional duties,[9] gross misconduct in the practice of the profession,[10] grossly unprofessional conduct of a character likely to deceive or defraud the public,[11] and any infamous, disgraceful, or improper conduct in a professional respect.[12] The subject matter of statutes prescribing such grounds is within the police power,[13] and, except in a few instances,[14] the statutes

(3) Oral representations as to graduation from a dental college, where it is clear that the board does not rely upon the verbal statement of any applicant as to graduation, but requires written proof. [a] Intention not to perform promise.—(1) The making of a promise, without intent to perform it, may, in a sense at least, amount to a false statement as to an existing condition within a statute authorizing the revocation of a dentist's license where he has obtained money by false representations. Richardson v. Simpson, 88 Kan. 684, 129 P 1128, 43 LRANS 911 [reh den 90 Kan. 178, 133 P 534]. (2) In any event, it is dishonorable conduct see infra § 72.

91. See statutory provisions.
[a] One abortion.—The word "practice," as used in the statute, means "perform," and proof of the commission of one criminal abortion will justify revocation. Blumberg v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 96 N. J. L. 331, 115 A 439.

92. See statutory provisions.
[a] "Crime," as used in statute, embraces "the violation of any penal law of the state, and clearly includes all felonies and misdemeanors under the law of the state committed by the offender in the course of his professional conduct." Rodermund v. State, 167 Wis. 577, 582, 168 NW 390.

93. See statutory provisions.
[a] Vagueness and indefiniteness.—(1) The words "moral turpitude" are not so vague and indefinite as to render the statute void. Hughes v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 162 Ga. 246, 134 SE 42; State Bd. of Medical Examiners v. Harrison, 92 Wash. 577, 159 P 769. (2) "Moral turpitude" defined see Moral 41 C. J. p 212.
[b] Crimes involving moral turpitude include: (1) The distribution of obscene and indecent printed matter. Czarra v. Board of Medical Suprs., 25 App. (D. C.) 443 (dictum). (2) The mailing of a letter giving information to promote abortion. Kemp v. Board of Medical Suprs., 46 App. (D. C.) 173.
[c] Violations of liquor laws are not crimes involving moral turpitude, but are merely mala prohibita. Fort v. Brinkley, 87 Ark. 400, 112 SW 1084; In re Schill's License, 9 Pa. Dist. & Co. 202.
[d] Selling morphine.—(1) In one state it is held that the sale by a physician of morphine for other than medicinal purposes to an habitual user thereof is a crime involving moral turpitude, and a conviction thereof warrants the revocation of the physician's license. White v. Andrew, 70 Colo. 50, 197 P 564. (2) In another state, a statute of which permits a physician to prescribe as much as eight grains of morphine per day to any one patient, it is held that a physician's license may not be revoked merely because of his conviction of a violation of the Harrison Anti-Narcotic Act (State Bd. of Medical Examiners v. Friedman, 150 Tenn. 152, 263 SW 75), (3) but it is conceded that the record of conviction in a particular case may show guilt of acts involving moral turpitude, as where it shows that the convicted physician is a mere drug peddler, preying on the necessities of the unfortunate class known as "drug addicts" (State Bd. of Medical Examiners v. Friedman, supra).
[e] Status of criminal proceedings.—The statute does not apply, so as to authorize revocation, where (1) defendant has pleaded guilty but has not been sentenced (In re Schill's License, 9 Pa. Dist. & Co. 202), (2) or has been sentenced, but has taken an appeal and been allowed bail pending the appeal (In re Bureau of Medical Education, etc., 29 Pa. Dist. 430).

are held not to be void for uncertainty or indefiniteness.[15] Particular matters held to be within such statutory grounds include drunkenness;[16] writing illegal liquor prescriptions;[17] prescribing drugs for addicts without any attempt or purpose to cure them;[18] obtaining a license or certificate by fraud or misrepresentation;[19] the making of a promise without any intention to perform it;[20] inducing a patient to submit to treatment by a person who is not a physician by representing him to be such;[21] maintaining different offices under different names with the intent to perpetrate a fraud on the public;[22] and causing the publication of an advertisement containing false statements, with knowledge of the falsity and an intent to deceive the public.[23] On the other hand, it is held not to be immoral, dishonorable, or unprofessional for a physician to conceal the fact that one of his patients has innocently suffered the accident of a miscarriage.[24] Also, it is held in some jurisdictions that the offer or willingness of a physician to produce an abortion is not unprofessional or dishonorable conduct;[25] but in other jurisdictions it is held that an agreement by a physician to perform, or attempt to perform, an abortion is gross misconduct in the practice of his profession.[26]

Association of words. As used in the statutes under consideration, the word "dishonorable" is deemed to qualify "unprofessional,"[27] so that the two words mean "unprofessional conduct which is dishonorable;"[28] but the statutes are not invalid because they use the word "immoral" in the disjunctive[29] and thereby provide for the revocation of a license for conduct which is unprofessional and dishonorable without being immoral also.[30] Where the words "infamous, disgraceful, or improper" are employed in a statute to characterize the conduct for which a license may be suspended, the word "improper" is included in,[31] but does not necessarily include,[32] "infamous" and "disgraceful." By applying the rule of construction known as "ejusdem generis,"[33] the general expression "or other unprofessional or dishonorable conduct," or similar language, following a statutory enumeration of specific grounds of revocation, may be limited to things of the same general nature or class as those enumerated;[34] but this rule is not applicable where the specific grounds stated are unrelated to, and materially different from, each other.[35]

Statutory definition of unprofessional conduct. Some statutes naming unprofessional conduct as a ground for the revocation of a license or certificate of a physician define the term to mean and include, among other matters: All advertising of medical business which is intended, or has a tendency, to deceive the public or impose upon credulous or ignorant persons, and so be harmful or injurious to public morals or safety;[36] the use by the holder of the license or certificate of a fictitious name, or a name other than his own, in any sign, advertisement, or announcement of, or in connection with, his practice;[37] the betrayal of a professional se-

[e] Statute does not prevent "a practitioner from advertising cures or inviting the public to his healing, but only advertisements intended to beguile. It attacks not mere unethical conduct, but wrongful conduct." State Bd. of Medical Examiners v. Jordan, 92 Wash. 234, 239, 158 P 982.

37. See statutory provisions.

[a] Definiteness.—"That the provision of the law in question is neither vague nor indefinite is obvious. Every person with intelligence enough to have been granted a license to practice medicine must be presumed to know his own name. When such a person is informed in so many words that in any announcement or advertisement of his practice he may not use a name other than his own, i. e., if he uses any name at all it must be his own name, there can be no doubt that he understands precisely what is required. It would, indeed, be difficult to put it in plainer language." Berry v. Alderson, 59 Cal. A. 729, 733, 211 P 836.

[b] "Provision is aimed at conduct much less reprehensible than fraudulent misrepresentation. Our view is that the legislature intended that a person to whom the privilege had been granted of practicing medicine and representing himself to the world as qualified and worthy of the confidence of the sick, should, when cret;[38] obtaining a fee on an assurance that an incurable disease can be permanently cured;[39] and a willful violation of the law as to the reporting of infectious diseases.[40]

[§ 73] cc. Proceedings—(aa) In General. The right to practice conferred by a license[41] can be taken away only by appropriate proceedings calling for revocation[42] or by voluntary relinquishment.[43] While a proceeding before an officer, board, or department to revoke the license or certificate of a physician or dentist is administrative,[44] rather than judicial,[45] and it need not be conducted with the exactness, formality, or technicality required before a judicial tribunal,[46] nevertheless the holder of the license or certificate cannot be deprived of it without due process of law,[47] or, in other words, without due notice[48] and full opportunity to be heard.[49] Defects in the notice may be waived by appearance by counsel and filing a motion for a continuance;[50] and an exception to the rule requiring notice exists where a license is void because issued without authority to a person not entitled thereto.[51] In most jurisdictions an action or proceeding to revoke a license is deemed to be civil,[52] rather than criminal,[53] in character, but in a few jurisdictions it is deemed to be quasi-criminal.[54] At any rate a conviction of crime in a court of competent jurisdiction is not a condition precedent to the proceeding,[55] unless conviction of crime is the ground upon which revocation is sought;[56] nor are the trial and acquittal of a physician in a court of criminal jurisdiction on the same charges exhibited against him by a medical society a bar to an inquiry under the statute for the purpose of depriving him of the right to practice.[57] Also, the proceeding is not subject to a statute limiting the time for commencing a criminal prosecution[58] or an action to enforce a statutory penalty or forfeiture.[59]

[§ 74] (bb) Parties.[60] The complaint or petition in an action or proceeding to revoke the license offering his services by advertisement or announcement, do so under his own name. This simple requirement, so easily complied with, was not aimed particularly at the person who was willing to incur the odium of actual fraud, but was designed to offer a much wider protection to the public by assuring to it a reasonable certainty of knowing in every case precisely with whom it was dealing, the importance of the relation of physician and patient, and the very serious consequences which might follow improper, unskillful or negligent treatment, rendering such openness and candor particularly desirable." Berry v. Alderson, 59 Cal. A. 729, 732, 211 P 836.

[c] Where case is within statute, the license or certificate may be revoked. Berry v. Alderson, 59 Cal. A. 729, 211 P 836 [foll Grisso v. Board of Medical Examiners, 75 Cal. A. 385, 242 P 912].

of a physician or dentist may be made or filed by such a person or officer as is authorized by statute to do so,[61] or, where the statute is silent as to who may make the complaint, it may be made by any person or citizen.[62] The state is a proper,[63] but not a necessary,[64] party, unless a statute requires it to be named as plaintiff.[65] Under the statutes of some,[66] but not other,[67] jurisdictions the board of examiners is a necessary party defendant to a proceeding brought by the state or attorney-general.

[§ 75] (cc) Complaint. The license or certificate of a physician or dentist may be revoked or canceled only upon proper and sufficient charges.[68] A complaint is sufficient where it informs the physician or dentist not only of the nature of the wrong charged, but also of the particular instances of its perpetration;[69] it is not subject to the strict rules governing pleadings before a judicial tribunal,[70] as in actions at law[71] or criminal prosecutions;[72] certainty to a common intent is all that is required;[73] and informality is not fatal.[74] It is not necessary to specify the law under which the charges are preferred;[75] and even though the acts set out are alleged to be within a specified section of the statute, it is immaterial whether they are within that section or another if they are within some section of the statute.[76] Where revocation is sought upon the ground of procuring, or aiding in procuring, a criminal abortion,[77] it is not necessary to allege that the woman upon whom the abortion was committed had become quick.[78]

Signature and verification.[79] Some statutes require a request for the revocation of a physician's license to be signed by all members of the examining board.[80] Where the charges are signed by the board, the omission of the signature of the secretary is not necessarily fatal.[81] In the absence of a statute requiring verification, the complaint need not be verified.[82] The charges will be construed to be verified on knowledge where they purport to be so except as to matters alleged on information and belief and there are no allegations on information and belief.[83]

Demurrer or other objection. The holder of the license or certificate may demur or otherwise object, either formally or informally, to the sufficiency of the complaint,[84] even upon the hearing;[85] and even if he does not do so,[86] the board is without power or jurisdiction to revoke his license or certificate where the complaint is not sufficient;[87] but where the sufficiency of the complaint is not challenged before the board or on appeal, it will, on a further appeal to a higher court, be given a most liberal construction in order to sustain the order or judgment revoking the license.[88]

Complaint may be amended during the hearing so as to conform to evidence introduced without objection.[89]

[§ 76] (dd) Evidence.[90] In a proceeding before a board to revoke a license or certificate of a physician or dentist, the holder of the license or certificate must be given an opportunity to introduce evidence[91] and cross-examine the witnesses who testify against him;[92] and a statute governing the proceedings is unconstitutional as denying due process of law where it does not make any provision whereby the attendance of witnesses can be required or their testimony procured;[93] but a statute is not invalid as denying due process of law where, although it does not empower the board to issue subpœnas or compulsory process for witnesses, books, and papers, it does provide for the taking and reading of the depositions of witnesses who do not voluntarily appear;[94] and even affidavits may be received in the discretion of the board,[95] at least where the physician or dentist does not object.[96] A refusal of the secretary of the board to issue subpœnas requested by the physician is not fatal where the physician has not applied to the board for an order directing the secretary to comply with the request.[97] The board should not act contrary to the ordinary rules governing the admissibility of evidence.[98] While it is within the jurisdiction of the board to determine the competency of evidence submitted to it,[99] yet where all the evidence received by the board is inadmissible, it is without jurisdiction to revoke the license.[1] In some instances, articles of incorporation may be admitted in evidence,[2] and standard medical works may be consulted by members of the board as an aid to their memory and understanding,[3] although not for the purpose of using them as evidence.[4] The sufficiency[5] of evidence received by the board may[6] and must[7] be determined by it. In order to justify the revocation of the license, the evidence must give rise to more than a mere suspicion or conjecture of the existence of grounds therefor;[8] but where several acts or grounds are charged, it is not necessary that all be established by satisfactory proof;[9] and as the proceeding is not a criminal one,[10] it is not governed by the rules as to the evidence necessary to convict in a criminal prosecution,[11] especially a statutory rule forbidding a conviction upon the testimony of accomplices alone.[12] Regardless of whether it is considered to be a rule of law[13] or a rule of evidence,[14] a statute providing that the record of a conviction of an offense involving moral turpitude shall be conclusive evidence in a proceeding to revoke a license is within the power of the legislature to enact.[15] on the ground that he aided and abetted an unlicensed employee or other person to practice dentistry, he has the burden of proving that such person was duly licensed.[16] However, an inference that the dentist knew of his employee's unlawful practice cannot be drawn in the face of uncontradicted evidence to the contrary.[17] Indeed, all intendments are in favor of a dentist in a proceeding to revoke his license.[18] The burden if not upon complainant[19] or the board[20] to prove that a college which granted a physician a diploma is not one having the requirements contemplated by the statute.

Judicial notice. The board may take judicial notice of its own records.[21]

[§ 77] (ee) Trial or Hearing. Except in the case of a license or certificate which is void because issued without authority to a person not entitled thereto,[22] a physician or dentist cannot be deprived of his license or certificate with a full opportunity to be heard[23] before an impartial body,[24] and a statute providing for revocation is unconstitutional as denying due process of law where it does not provide for a hearing[25] or where, although it provides generally for a hearing, it does not provide or prescribe any method or means for,[26] or vest the board with any of the powers essential to,[27] the conduct of the trial or hearing. Upon request, the board should permit the taking of the testimony in shorthand[28] and its incorporation into the record.[29]

Continuance. Where its action is not arbitrary[30] or an abuse of discretion,[31] the granting[32] or refusing[33] of a continuance by the board is a proper exercise of its power.

Before court or court and jury.[34] Some statutes authorizing the revocation of a license or certificate by a court[35] provide for a jury trial of issues of fact, if requested by either party.[36] A trial de novo of the questions presented to the board is not contemplated by some statutes authorizing the revocation of a certificate by a court where its issuance resulted from fraud, perjury, or error of the board.[37]

[§ 78] (ff) Order. It is essential to the validity of an order revoking a license to practice medicine that it shall show the facts essential to the jurisdiction of the officer, board, or department making it.[38] The revocation cannot rest in parol;[39] a record thereof must be preserved.[40]

Effect. An order or judgment revoking a license to practice medicine is in effect one in rem;[41] it establishes the status of the former holder of the license as a person not entitled to practice medicine in the state;[42] and it is not open to him, in a subsequent prosecution for practicing medicine without a license, to relitigate the matter decided in the revocation proceeding.[43] However, the revocation of a license destroys only such rights as had their foundation in it,[44] and where a full sanipractic license, granted to a person holding a limited license to practice drugless healing, is revoked, the practitioner is entitled to a return of the limited license[45] and to continue to practice thereunder.[46] Also, charges may be preferred against a physician or midwife notwithstanding the same charges have been previously passed upon by the board and not sustained,[47] or a prior order of revocation has been rescinded because of defects in the proceedings.[48]

[§ 79] (gg) Judicial Review or Interference—aaa. In General. If no appeal is provided for, the findings of a board in a proceeding to revoke a physician's or dentist's license are conclusive on the courts where the board had jurisdiction,[49] and acted honestly, impartially, and not arbitrarily,[50] or, as sometimes said, in the absence of fraud, corruption, or oppression.[51] However, the action of the board is not beyond investigation by the courts;[52] where it is arbitrary, the courts will intervene to protect the rights of the physician.[53]

[§ 80] bbb. Certiorari or Writ of Review.[54] Certiorari, or a statutory substitute therefor known as a "writ of review," is a proper remedy to obtain a review of an order of a board revoking or suspending a license to practice medicine, dentistry, naturopathy, or chiropractics[55] where it is so provided by statute,[56] or where, although an appeal is provided by statute, the statute is unconstitutional[57] or the appeal provided for is not an adequate and complete remedy.[58] The powers of the court are limited on certiorari or a writ of review,[59] and, with the exception of such additional questions, if any, as are contemplated by a statute governing the remedy,[60] the only question open for review is whether the board exceeded its jurisdiction;[61] the merits of the decision are not open to review,[62] and the court will consider the evidence for, and only for, the purpose of ascertaining whether the board exceeded its jurisdiction[63] or abused its discretion,[64] where a review of the latter question is permitted by statute.[65]

[§ 81] ccc. Error Proceedings. Under the construction placed upon the statutes of a few jurisdictions, proceedings in error are available to obtain a review of an order of a board revoking a physician's license.[66] In such error proceedings, the order of the board will be affirmed where the physician was given proper and sufficient notice of the hearing,[67] as well as opportunity at the hearing to vindicate himself from the charges preferred against him,[68] and the board had before it competent evidence of all the jurisdictional facts,[69] even though such evidence was opposed by other and weighty evidence.[70]

[§ 82] ddd. Appeal. In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that, where a license of a physician has been revoked by a board, an appeal may be taken to a designated court of a county.[71] While the failure of a statute providing for such an appeal to prescribe rules of practice and procedure does not render the right to appeal nugatory,[72] it may make the remedy by appeal inadequate and incomplete[73] so as to authorize resort to certiorari.[74]

Pleadings or written charges. When not provided for by statute, the filing of a petition by appellant cannot be required,[75] and likewise where no provision therefor is made by statute, an answer filed by the board is nugatory.[76] Where a statute provides that the board shall prefer written charges on appeal, but specifies no time for doing so, the court may properly refuse to dismiss written charges because they were not preferred at the first term of court after the appeal was entered.[77]

Evidence and trial. Under the construction placed upon the statutes of some,[78] but not other,[79] jurisdictions the physician is entitled to a trial de novo on appeal. Also, some statutes are construed to entitle the physician to a trial of controverted issues before a jury;[80] and regardless of whether or not a jury trial is a matter of right, the court is not deprived of jurisdiction by allowing a jury trial with the consent of the parties.[81] The ordinary rules of evidence[82] are applied in determining the admissibility of evidence on a trial de novo on appeal.[83]

(2) On the other hand, the order will be affirmed where there is sufficient competent evidence to support it and fulfill jurisdictional requirements, even though incompetent evidence was also introduced (Young v. Board of Medical Examiners, (Cal. A.) 268 P 1089), (3) and in such case the court will not review a conflict of testimony (Jordan v. Alderson, 48 Cal. A. 547, 192 P 170) (4) or irregular or erroneous rulings on the admissibility of evidence (Minaker v. Adams, 55 Cal. A. 374, 203 P 806; Jordan v. Alderson, supra). [a] County where hearing was had.—Under a statute providing for an appeal to the circuit court in and for the county in which the hearing before the board was had, an appeal will not be dismissed because the record is silent as to where the hearing was had, where the motion to dismiss recites that the hearing was had in the county in which the circuit court to which the appeal was taken was located, and the decision of the board purports to have been signed in that county. [a] Criminal proceedings.—(1) On a trial de novo on appeal from an order revoking a physician's license on the ground of his conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude, the indictment and sentence of the physician in a federal court for using the mails to defraud are properly admitted. Hughes v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 165 Ga. 892, 142 SE 285 [app dism 49 SCt 36 mem]. (2) The admission of a certified copy of defendant's plea, and the verdict, judgment, and sentence in a criminal case standing alone, is erroneous (Lewis v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 23 Ga. A. 647, 99 SE 147); (3) but the error may be cured by the subsequent admission of a certified copy of the bill of indictment showing the offense with which defendant was charged and of which he was convicted (Lewis v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, supra). (4) Where evidence showing a conviction of selling narcotics has been admitted, other evidence explaining prescriptions for narcotics is inadmissible. Seitz v. Ohio State Medical Bd., 24 Oh. A. 154, 157 NE 304.

[b] Pamphlets.—(1) On appeal and trial de novo in a proceeding to revoke the license of a physician on the ground, among others, of causing the publication and circulation, by

Costs. In the absence of express statutory provision, defendant is not entitled to recover costs upon reversal.[84]

[§ 83] eee. Further Review. Under various constitutional or statutory provisions of different jurisdictions an appeal to a higher court may be taken from a judgment on appeal from an order by a board revoking or suspending a license,[85] and an appeal[86] or writ of error[87] may be taken from a judgment in certiorari proceedings.

[§ 84] (h) Surrender and Restoration.[88] Where a medical practitioner voluntarily surrendered his license to a grand jury and admitted the existence of facts which would justify the revocation of it, he cannot succeed in a suit to compel the state department of health to reinstate and restore the license,[89] as, if the surrender of the license is to be regarded as one in effect made to defendant, it was as effectual to terminate the right to practice medicine in the state as a revocation would have been,[90] and, if it is not to be regarded as a surrender to defendant, it cannot be called upon to reinstate or restore the license.[91]

[§ 85] (2) Temporary, Annual, or Renewal License.[92] Under the construction placed upon some statutes providing for the issuance of an annual license and a renewal thereof, the appropriate board has no discretion as to the issuance of a renewal license upon application therefor,[93] provided applicant has been previously licensed;[94] but under the construction placed upon other statutes, the old license is merely prima facie evidence of a right to the new one,[95] and does not confer an incontestable right to a renewal.[96] A statutory provision authorizing a single member of the state medical board to grant a temporary license to an applicant to practice medicine until the next meeting of the board has been construed to authorize the granting of a temporary license to an applicant from year to year,[97] provided the full board in the meantime has not refused to license applicant;[98] but after the board, as such, has refused a license to an applicant, no one member can grant him one.[99] The fact that the board of medical examiners, in issuing a temporary license, used the form of a regular license, which erroneously recited that applicant had passed a satisfactory examination in medicine and surgery before the board, and was thereby authorized to practice, and merely limited the duration of the license, does not constitute such license a regular unlimited license to practice.[1]

Revocation. A statute providing that a license to practice medicine may be revoked only for unprofessional or dishonorable conduct has no application to a temporary license issued by the board of medical examiners without authority.[2] An annual license cannot be revoked after it has expired by its own limitation.[3]

[§ 86] (3) Verification License. Under a statute providing for the issuance of a verification license upon the production of documents sufficient to establish the existence and validity of a license issued by a former board, the board is required to issue a verification license in a proper case,[4] and a practitioner within the scope of the statute, who does not obtain a verification license within the time limited by statute, must suffer the consequences of practicing contrary to law.[5] A mere temporary license issued by a member of the board and authorizing the practice of medicine only until the next regular meeting of the board is not a verification license within the meaning of the statute.[6]

[§ 87] (4) License to Itinerant.[7] The legislature may not only require an itinerant doctor, physician, or surgeon, to obtain a license from a state board to practice in the state,[8] but may also delegate po-means of pamphlets, of an advertisement relative to diseases of the sexual organs, a pamphlet having the same contents as the pamphlet attached to the original charges against the physician is properly admitted. Hughes v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 165 Ga. 892, 142 SE 285 [app dism 49 SCt 36 mem]. (2) However, passages from pamphlets issued by governmental authority and similar to the contents of the pamphlets issued by the physician are properly excluded as irrelevant and immaterial. Hughes v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, supra.

[c] Testimony as to actual reputation of medical school is not erroneously admitted where no objection is made upon a proper ground and the witness is peculiarly qualified to know the reputation of the school. [b] Indictment for practicing as an itinerant physician without a li-lice power to a municipality to require such a person to obtain a license to practice within the municipality;[9] and an ordinance enacted in pursuance of such delegated power is valid where it is reasonable[10] and of uniform operation;[11] but the municipality is without authority, under such statutory delegation of power, to require a dental surgeon to obtain a license.[12] An additional license for practice in a transient office is, or at times has been, required by statute.[13]

[§ 88] c. Registration[14]—(1) In General. Statutes authorizing or requiring registration in order to entitle a person to practice medicine and surgery or a like profession such as dentistry, optometry, midwifery, nursing, or veterinary medicine and surgery, may be broadly divided into three classes, namely, those requiring registration generally;[15] those requiring registration or recording of a license or certificate in a designated public office in the county in which the holder resides or intends to practice;[16] and those authorizing registration, within a limited period of time after their enactment, of persons engaged in practice prior thereto.[17] The necessity of complying with a statute requiring registration depends upon whether the person[18] and the act or acts[19] in question are or are not within the application of the statute or some exemption therein, and whether the requirement or exemption is valid or invalid.[20] Statutes requiring registration generally make practice without compliance therewith

State, 93 Tex. Cr. 154, 246 SW 382. (2) Unless he subsequently changes his residence or domicile to another county (State v. Zechman, 157 Iowa 158, 138 NW 387; Hilliard v. State, 7 Tex. A. 69), (3) and not even then under the construction placed upon some statutes (In re Dentists, 16 Pa. Dist. 560), (4) a person who is properly registered, or whose license or certificate is properly registered or recorded, in one county may practice in any county in the state, and additional registry in another county is not necessary to entitle him to visit or meet patients in that county (State v. Patrick v. Perryman, 52 Ill. A. 514. (3) An attempt to register under an act before it goes into effect is ineffectual. State v. McIntosh, 205 Mo. 616, 103 SW 1071.

18. See cases infra this note.

[a] Application of requirements and exemptions to persons.—(1) Different statutes authorizing or requiring registration have been variously construed to refer to persons practicing at the time of their enactment (In re Registration of Dentists, 17 Pa. Dist. 991); (2) to apply only to persons receiving certificates thereafter (Com. v. Craig, 144 Ky. 249, 137 SW 1083; Com. v. Nevill, 92 SW 550, 29 KyL 108); (3) or to apply to all practitioners, including not only those previously engaged in practice, but also those becoming qualified thereafter (Cutty v. Carson, 125 Md. 25, 93 A 302). (4) Physicians registered under a former law are sometimes exempted from registering again. State v. Morgan, 96 Mo. A. 343, 70 SW 267. an offense,[21] and some also make it an offense for an unregistered person to advertise to practice medicine,[22] or to take or use any name, title, addition, or description implying that he is registered or specially qualified to practice the profession in question.[23] Also, some statutes make it an offense to file, or attempt to file, for record a certificate issued to another person.[24] It is held that a penal statute relating to registration may be considered in connection with a civil statute relating to the same subject;[25] but it is also held that, where the two are irreconcilable, the penal statute is inoperative.[26]

Right to be registered. A person may be entitled to be registered,[27] provided he possesses the qualifications required by law[28] and complies with the conditions prescribed by law as to proof thereof.[29] In some instances he or she may be entitled to registration without examination,[30] but not where the case is not within an exception to a statute requiring examination.[31]

Excuse for failure to register. Lack of registration before commencing to practice may be excused by a mistake of fact[32] or by the failure of the registration officer to have the proper book in which to make the registration.[33]

Curing invalid registration. Under the construction placed upon some statutes, a registration which is not legal because of error, misunderstanding, or unintentional omission may be validated from its date by a subsequent valid registration.[34] However, it is held that the county court has no jurisdiction to make an order directing the county clerk to enter a name nunc pro tunc in the register of physicians and surgeons.[35]

[§ 89] (2) Cancellation. The registration of a physician, dentist, or unlicensed assistant to a registered or licensed dentist may be canceled or revoked, or his name may be removed or erased from the register, on the grounds prescribed by statute,[36] or by a valid regulation adopted by a board,[37] such as the violation of any provision of the law regulating the profession in question,[38] conviction of a felony[39] or misdemeanor,[40] assisting an unregistered person to practice,[41] employment of an uncertified person as a substitute,[42] misconduct,[43] unprofessional conduct,[44] or infamous or disgraceful conduct in a pro-

[a] Words "specially qualified to practice dentistry" (1) as used in the statute, import a professional qualification entitling the holder to registration and not merely professional skill or competence. Bellerby v. Heyworth, [1910] A. C. 377 [overr Barnes v. Barnes, [1909] 1 K. B. 38]. (2) As otherwise stated, the words refer to a qualification in the nature of a degree, diploma, etc., and do not include the case of a description implying mere personal skill or accomplishment. Byrne v. Rogers, [1910] 2 Ir. 220.
[b] Limited company.—(1) Although the word "person," as used in a statute relating to dentistry, does not apply to a corporation or company (Atty.-Gen. v. Myddletons, [1907] 1 Ir. 471; O'Duffy v. Jaffe, [1904] 2 Ir. 27), (2) and a company is not subject to prosecution under the statute (O'Duffy v. Jaffe, supra), (3) nevertheless a limited company is not at liberty to use the word "dentist" or its synonyms in such a way as to amount to a false representation calculated to induce the public to believe that the individuals whom it comprises or employs are registered or qualified "dentists" (Atty.-Gen. v. Myddletons, supra), (4) and the attorney-general may obtain an injunction restraining it from doing so (Atty.-Gen. v. Myddletons, supra; Atty.-Gen. v. Appleton, [1907] 1 Ir. 252).

[a] Statute extends to any employment of an uncertified person as a substitute, and is not confined to employment for pay. Re Feldmann, 97 L. T. Rep. N. S. 548 (statute relating to registration of midwives).

43. See statutory provisions.
[a] Misconduct by midwife (1) within the meaning of a statute justifying the removal of her name from the roll of midwives, is not confined to misconduct in the discharge of her duties as a midwife, but includes misconduct which tends to unfit her for the discharge of the duties of a midwife. Stock v. Central Midwives Bd., [1915] 3 K. B. 756. (2) Living in adultery may constitute misconduct within the meaning of the foregoing rule. Stock v. Central Midwives Bd., supra.
[b] Unbecoming or improper conduct of physician.—A statute naming improper or unbecoming conduct of a registered physician as a ground for striking his name from the register "shews plainly, to my mind, that the unbecoming or improper conduct referred to is of the same nature, though perhaps not of the same degree, as the criminal conduct mentioned in the same paragraph, and was intended primarily to deal with the relation of physicians with their patients, and their conduct as it might affect their patients, especially as criminal conduct as it affected other people was dealt with by the previous paragraph, and not for the purpose of regulating quarrels between physicians which might be grounds for civil actions in Court, much less for the purpose of regulating and enforcing that somewhat elastic doctrine known as professional ethics." Re Bechtel, (Alta.) 10 WestLR 473, 474.

44. See statutory provisions.
[a] Conduct prior to taking effect

fessional respect.[45] Power to cancel the registration of a practitioner, or to cause his name to be erased from the register, is variously conferred by the statutes of different jurisdictions upon a board,[46] commission,[47] or, in some of the Canadian provinces, upon the council of the college of physicians and surgeons of the particular province,[48] after a standing committee of such council has ascertained the facts[49] and made a written report;[50] and an appeal to a designated court from the decision of the board, commission, or council is provided for by statute.[51] Where registration is with a prothonotary as an officer of a court, the court may order it canceled for fraud;[52] but a board vested with statutory power to cause a name to be expunged from the records in the office of a clerk of court cannot sue in equity for the same purpose;[53] and where, in filing a certificate of annulment of registration, a county clerk does not act in the capacity of a clerk of a particular court, that court is without authority to require him to cancel and set aside the certificate.[54] Inquiry into charges against a registered physician may be made notwithstanding the acts complained of may be the subject matter of an action at law[55] or the practitioner has been acquitted in a criminal prosecution therefor.[56]

Notice and opportunity to be heard. Notice[57] and an opportunity to be heard[58] must be accorded a person before revoking his registration or erasing his name from the register; but where notice is given, it will not be construed with technical strictness.[59]

[§ 90] (3) Prosecutions.[60] Proper and sufficient allegations in the indictment or information,[61] together with proper and sufficient evidence of guilt,[62] and, where the case is tried before a jury, proper and sufficient instructions,[63] are essential to a con-

of statute.—The name of a dentist may be struck off the register of practitioners for infamous or unprofessional conduct on his part before the statute took effect. G—— v. College of Dental Surgeons, 14 B. C. 129.

[b] It is unprofessional conduct: (1) For a dentist to violate a statute by using a trade name. In re Moody, 14 B. C. 206 ("New York Dentists"). (2) To perform a pretended operation upon a woman to enable her to conceal her real condition from her parents. In re Telford, 11 B. C. 355.

45. See statutory provisions.

[a] What constitutes.—Infamous or disgraceful conduct in a professional respect may consist in: (1) Doing something in regard to the medical profession which would be reasonably regarded as disgraceful and dishonorable by professional brethren of good repute and competency. Allinson v. Medical Education, etc., Gen. Council, [1894] 1 Q. B. 750. (2) Misrepresenting to a patient the character of his disease, and obtaining money from him upon the strength of such misrepresentation. Re Washington, 23 Ont. 299. (3) Violating a liquor law by supplying liquor unnecessarily. Re Cherniak, 46 Ont. L. 434, 51 DomLR 522, 33 CanCrCas 43. (4) It does not embrace mere advertising (Re Washington, supra), (5) but the rule is otherwise as to an advertisement which is a studied effort to impose upon the credulity of the public for gain (Re Washington, supra), (6) or which reflects upon the medical profession generally in order to induce people to come to the practitioner in question for advice (Allinson v. [a] Scope of appeal.—The appeal given by some statutes is not limited, but is a rehearing, and the court is absolutely unfettered in any investigation which it may think it right to make in order to ascertain the merits. [d] Matters not properly admissible in evidence include: (1) Benefits resulting from treatment by accused. Larson v. State, 106 Tex. Cr. 261, 285 SW 317. (2) Records showing entries made under a law subsequently repealed. Reum v. State, 84 Tex. Cr. 225, 206 SW 523. (3) An article published in a newspaper purporting to be a communication from accused, in which he referred to a former arrest for a similar offense, and stated that he should continue to do those things which he had been previously doing and for which he was arrested. State v. Yates, 145 Iowa 332, 124 NW 174 (in the absence of evidence that accused was engaged in practicing medicine prior to the publication of the article).

[e] Evidence held sufficient to warrant or sustain conviction, or show violation of statute. Hathaway v. State, 14 Ga. A. 415, 81 SE 260; State v. Crombie, 107 Minn. 166, 119 NW 658; Blain v. [a] Charge held fairly to submit defense that accused was practicing viction of an offense created by a statute requiring registration in order to entitle a person to practice medicine or dentistry.

Residence of accused in county in which the prosecution was instituted and in which it is alleged he failed to have his license or certificate recorded or registered must be alleged[64] and proved[65] by the state in a prosecution for practicing in violation of a statute requiring registration of a license or certificate in the county in which the holder resides. However, residence may be proved by circumstantial evidence,[66] and a prima facie case of residence in the proper county is sufficient to call for affirmative proof to rebut it.[67]

Who may institute prosecution. In some jurisdictions any member of the public may institute the prosecution.[68]

Summary conviction is subject to the statutes applicable to such a conviction.[69] In some jurisdictions the record of a summary conviction for practicing medicine without registration must set out the particular act or acts which constituted the practicing,[70] and state that the practice was for hire, gain, or hope of reward.[71] On a motion to quash a summary conviction, the court will not review the evidence further than to ascertain if there was any evidence showing an offense.[72]

[§ 91] 3. Advertising or Soliciting.[73] A statute forbidding physicians and surgeons to solicit patients through paid agents is a valid police regulation.[74] Also, the courts have upheld statutes prohibiting some, but not other, kinds of advertising by an osteopath;[75] the same is true of statutes prohibiting advertising by a physician under a name other than his own;[76] but a statute prohibiting any physician from causing the publication of any advertisement relative to any disease of the sexual organs has been declared unconstitutional.[77] In some states the statutes do not require an advertisement that the practice of optometry is being carried on in a store or other establishment to contain or set forth the name of the optometrist employed to do the work.[78] Statutes regulating advertising are to be interpreted with reference to the evils the legislature intended to remedy and prevent.[79]

[§ 92] 4. Practice under Forbidden Name. In some jurisdictions there are statutes prohibiting the practice of medicine under a name other than that of the practitioner,[80] or prohibiting the practice of dentistry under a false, assumed, or trade name, or the name of a corporation, company, or association.[81] Exceptions in the latter class of statutes of legally incorporated dental corporations existing and in operation prior to a specified date, or of persons who have been in actual business under the name of a company, association, or corporation for a specified period of time, will be given effect in a case falling within their terms,[82] but they will not be extended by construction.[83]

[§ 93] 5. Place of Practice.[84] A statute making it unlawful for an itinerant vendor of any drug, nostrum, ointment, or appliance publicly to profess to cure or treat diseases, injuries, or deformities is construed as intended merely to regulate the practice of medicine,[85] rather than the sale of drugs or patent or proprietary medicines,[86] and to make a public profession to cure or treat an element of the offense;[87] and, as so construed, is valid.[88]

Optometry. A statute prohibiting a licensed optometrist from peddling from door to door, establishing temporary offices, practicing outside of, or away from, his office or place of business, or operating branch offices unless each branch office is fully equipped with the instruments necessary to make an optometric examination and is in charge of a regularly licensed optometrist, is a reasonable exercise of the police power.[89] Such a statute is construed not to prohibit intermittent practice with the necessary instruments in a home or hospital,[90] or the use only occasionally or at intervals of an office regularly and permanently maintained for the practice of optometry.[91] A statute limiting the practice of

[§ 94] 6. Use of Prophylactic at Childbirth. A statute, making it a crime for a physician to fail to use a prophylactic against inflammation of the eyes of an infant immediately after birth in a maternity home, hospital, or public or charitable institution, does not apply to a failure to use a prophylactic in any place other than the places designated in the statute.[93]

[§ 95] C. Privilege or Occupation Taxes.[94] The legislature may impose an occupation tax upon physicians and surgeons,[95] or upon itinerant physicians alone,[96] but, in doing so, it must not discriminate between portions of the same class of practitioners.[97] It is beyond the authority of a state board of medical examiners to agree that money paid as a fee for a license of an itinerant shall be returned in the event a pertinent statute is adjudged unconstitutional by the supreme court of the state in a pending case.[98] The liability, if any, of a physician and surgeon,[99] dentist,[1] or optician[2] for an occupation tax depends upon whether he is within the terms of a valid and unrepealed statute[3] or ordinance[4] imposing the tax.

Municipality may tax physicians or dentists practicing their professions within the corporate limits[5] where it is authorized by statute to do so,[6] and the statute is valid, as it is,[7] unless the delegation of such authority to a municipality is prohibited by a constitutional provision.[8]

III. RELATION TO PATIENT

[By MANUEL PRENNER]

[§ 96] A. Nature of Relation. The relation between a physician and his patient is one of trust and confidence,[9] and all dealings between them will be closely scrutinized,[10] particularly those inuring to the benefit of the physician.[11] While communications between a physician and his patient are ordinarily privileged,[12] it has been held that the question whether a breach of medical confidence is actionable depends on the character of the disclosure made.[13]

Authority of physician. While a physician may advise the removal of a patient to a hospital, he has, in an ordinary case, no authority to order such removal.[14]

[§ 97] B. Contract of Employment[15]—1. In General. The relation of physician or surgeon and patient is one arising out of a contract, express or implied,[16] and general rules as to the construc-

IV. NEGLIGENCE AND MALPRACTICE*

[§ 100] A. Definitions.[32] Malpractice (mala praxis)[33] is bad practice,[34] either through lack of skill or neglect to apply it, if possessed.[36] The term has been variously defined as the negligent performance by a physician or surgeon of the duties which are devolved and incumbent upon him on account of his contractual relations with his patient;[36] bad or unskillful practice by a physician or surgeon, whereby the patient is injured;[37] the treatment by a surgeon or physician in a manner contrary to accepted rules and with injurious results to the patient;[38] the bad professional treatment of disease, pregnancy, or bodily injury, from reprehensible ignorance or carelessness, or with criminal intent.[39] Malpractice is either willful,[40] negligent,[41] reply to letters giving symptoms, and the prescriptions consist of recommendations of his remedies, there is no relation of physician and surgeon between the purchaser of the remedies and the physician or his corporate successor in the business. [a] "The object of the law on the one hand is to guard the patient against the wrongful practice of ignorant or negligent men who hold themselves out as physicians or surgeons, and on the other to protect the faithful practitioner of ordinary learning, skill and ability from loss in reputation or purse on account of matters for which it would be unreasonable to hold him responsible." Loudon v. Scott, 58 Mont. 645, 655, 194 P 488, 12 ALR 1487. To same effect Heath v. Glisan, 3 Or. 64.

[b] Degree of skill undefinable.—"A medical man . . . was bound to have that degree of skill which could not be defined, but which, in the opinion of the jury, was a competent degree of skill and knowledge." Rich v. Pierpont, 3 F. & F. 35, 40.

[c] "Skill, in the sense in which it is here used, includes not only the knowledge or information which the surgeon has in reference to the propriety or desirability of a given operation, but also the ability to perform the operation in a proper and approved way." Akridge v. Noble, 114 Ga. 949, 958, 41 SE 78.

[d] "Ordinary skill," within the meaning of the rule that a physician or surgeon is only required to exercise ordinary care and skill, means such degree of skill as is commonly possessed by men engaged in the same profession. Boon v. Murphy, 108 N. C. 187, 12 SE 1032; Heath v. Glisan, 3 Or. 64.

[e] "Average" skill.—(1) The word "average" means the same as "reasonable" and "ordinary." Whitesell v. Hill, (Iowa) 66 NW 894. (2) "This rule . . . does not . . . contemplate merely average merit. . . . In order to determine who will come up to the legal standard indicated, we are not permitted to aggregate into a common class the quacks, the young men who have had no practice, the old ones who have dropped out of the practice,—the good and the very best,—and then strike an average between them. This method would evidently place the standard too low." Holtzman v. Hoy, 118 Ill. 534, 536, 8 NE 832, 59 AmR 390 [aff 19 Ill. A. 459].

dictions reasonable skill and care are required.[50] As otherwise stated, the rule is that a physician or surgeon impliedly contracts that he possesses and will use, in the treatment of his patients, a reasonable degree of skill and learning, such as is possessed by the average of those in his profession, and that he will exercise ordinary and reasonable care;[51] and he may be held to contract impliedly that he will apply his best judgment to the case,[52] that he will bring to his aid such obtainable remedies and appliances as discovery and experience have found to be the most proper and beneficial in aiding recovery,[53] and that no injurious consequences will result from want of proper skill, care, or diligence on his part.[54] These rules are subject to qualification with respect to the state of medical science[55] and the locality of practice.[56] The best skill and care of the physician himself have been held not the proper standard.[57] The possession of proper skill by a physician is insufficient without the use of such Knippel, 1 Mich. N. P. 109 (holding that a physician is bound to use "such skill as he has," as well as a reasonable degree of it).

"The doctrine is as illogical as the practical application of the rule would be ridiculous." Loudon v. Scott, supra.

skill in the treatment of the particular case.[58] The use of all known and reasonable means is not required, in the absence of a special contract therefor.[59] The obligation of a physician to exercise skill and care has been held to be imposed upon him even where there is no contract of employment;[60] and the fact that a contract relation exists does not require the use of more than ordinary care.[61]

Dentists, oculists, X-ray manipulators, and other practitioners are subject to the same rules that govern the duty and liability of physicians and surgeons in the performance of professional services.[62]

Specialists. A "specialist" has been defined as a physician or surgeon who applies himself to the study and practice of some particular branch of his profession[63] A physician holding himself out as having special knowledge and skill in the treatment of a particular organ, disease, or type of injury, is bound to bring to the discharge of his duty to a patient employing him as such specialist, not merely the average degree of skill possessed by general practitioners, but that special degree of skill and knowledge possessed by physicians who devote special study and attention to the treatment of such organ, disease, or injury, regard being had to the state of scientific knowledge at the time.[64] But it has been held that a specialist is not held to the exercise of any special or peculiar or higher degree of care.[65] The question when a physician becomes a specialist has been held to be not one of law, but of fact, primarily for his own determination.[66]

[§ 102] 2. Depending on State of Medical Science. In determining the degree of learning and skill required of a physician or surgeon in his treatment of a particular case, regard must be had to the state of medical or surgical science at the time.[67] While there is some authority to the effect that the skill and care required are those ordinarily exercised

[a] Reason for rule.—"No man is always at his best. . . . This would be to introduce into the case a new and confusing issue which has never been allowed. . . . "The duty of a surgeon to bring skill and care to the amelioration of the condition of his patient, does not arise from contract, but has its foundation in public considerations which are inseparable from the nature and exercise of his calling. Although the relation of physician and patient may be, and is perhaps generally, created by contract, the duty of the physician when he assumes it is fixed by rules which operate independently of its origin." by thoroughly educated physicians,[68] this requirement has been held erroneous as laying down too high a test.[69] It has been held that, in the use of a comparatively new power or force the properties of which are not fully known or understood, very great care should be exercised.[70]

[§ 103] 3. Depending on Locality of Practice. The general rule stated above[71] as to the degree of skill and care required of a physician or surgeon is frequently qualified by reference to a locality or localities. Thus it has been said that the locality in which a physician practices is important in determining the degree of skill and care required of him.[72] Some authorities hold that the skill and care required are those exercised by other physicians or surgeons engaged in the same general line of practice in the same locality, vicinity, community, or neighborhood,[73] or in the same general neighborhood or locality,[74] the latter phrase being held to be of much broader application than the phrase "the same neighborhood"[75] or "the same locality;"[76] while others require the degree of skill and care ordinarily exercised by physicians and surgeons in similar localities or neighborhoods.[77] There is also

[a] Reason for rule.—"The field of inquiry must be restricted. Some reasonable territorial limit must be recognized, if the law is to furnish a rule that is just to the parties and useful to the triers of the fact. As no limit was prescribed, the instruction given . . . was of little assistance to the jury, and was as liable to result in their finding a standard that is clearly too high as in one that is too low. The logical result is perhaps the same as . . . if no instruction upon the point were given." McBride v. Huckins, 76 N. H. 206, 208, 81 A 528.

support for the requirement of the care and skill ordinarily exercised in the same locality or in similar localities.[78] A lesser degree of skill has been required of practitioners in rural communities than of those in urban centers;[79] but this distinction has been criticized.[80]

[§ 104] 4. Following Recognized or Professed School, System, or Treatment. Physicians are bound to follow methods generally approved and recognized in the profession.[81] If the case is a new one, the patient must trust the skill and experience of the physician called, and likewise, if his injury or disease is attended with injury to other parts, or other diseases develop for which there is no established mode of treatment;[82] but where the settled practice allows but one course of treatment in the case, any departure of a physician therefrom may be regarded as the result of want of knowledge or attention,[83] or as an experiment;[84] and for injurious experimentation upon his patient a physician is liable.[85] While the law recognizes that there are different schools of medicine,[86] it does not favor, or give exclusive recognition to, any particular school or system of medicine, as against the others;[87] and the question whether or not a practitioner in his treatment of the case exercised the requisite degree of care, skill, and diligence is to be tested by the general rules and principles of the particular school of medicine which he follows, and not by those of other schools;[88] since he is only under the duty of exercising the degree of skill and care ordinarily exercised by practitioners of his school.[89] A school of medicine to be entitled to recognition under this rule must have rules and principles of practice for the guidance of all its members, as respects principles, diagnosis, and remedies, which each member is supposed to observe in any given case.[90]

[§ 105] 5. Depending on Nature of Case and Condition of Patient. What is reasonable care, skill, and diligence depends largely upon the circumstances of the particular case and upon the duty to be performed, the degree requisite being in proportion to the nature of the case.[91] Thus it has been held that reasonable care must be proportionate to the risks and dangers to be apprehended and guarded against in the particular case,[92] and to the importance and delicacy of the undertaking;[93] and that such care and attention must be given as are required by the exigencies of the case.[94]

Ordinary care of unconscious persons requires great precaution to see that no injury occurs.[95]

Consultation with other physicians. A physician or surgeon who is in doubt regarding a case should use his best judgment as to consultation with other physicians or surgeons;[96] but the measure of skill which a physician is bound to exercise is not affected by his refusal of the proffer of assistance from other physicians.[97]

[§ 106] 6. As Affected by Gratuitousness of Services.[98] The fact that a physician or surgeon renders his services gratuitously does not absolve him from the duty to use reasonable and ordinary care, skill, and diligence.[99]

"Practitioners of a reputable school of medicine are not to be harrassed by litigation and mulcted in damages because the course of treatment prescribed by that school differs from that adopted by another school." Remley v. Plummer, 79 Pa. Super. 117, 123.

[a] Reason for rule.—"Every community has its multitude of beliefs and modes of treatment of diseases and human ailments, and every citizen is absolutely free to adopt, believe or employ anyone he pleases. If the results are not what he would wish or the rest of the community think they ought to be, he can nevertheless not be hauled into court and have his method of treatment and his school of thought tested by the disciples or experts of some other school or belief. It would be disastrous to an allopath to try him by the tests the homeopath, the osteopath, the eclectic or mental science healer would apply, and it would likewise be dangerous to the osteopath to require of him an observance of the rules of treatment applied by any of the others enumerated." State v. Smith, 25 Ida. 541, 550, 138 P 1107.

[b] "In calling a physician, a person is presumed to elect that the treatment shall be according to the system or school of medicine to which such physician belongs." Van Sickle v. Doolittle, 184 Iowa 885, 169 NW 141. To same effect State v. Smith, 25 Ida. 541, 138 P 1107; Nelson v. Dahl, 174 Minn. 574, 219 NW 941.

[a] Reason for rule.—"If the maxim, 'Res ipso loquitur,' were applicable . . . and a failure to cure were held to be evidence, however slight, of negligence on the part of the physician or surgeon causing the bad result, few would be courageous enough to practice the healing art, for they would have to assume financial liability for nearly all the 'ills that flesh is heir to.'" 6. Wilson v. Blair, 65 Mont. 155, 211 P 289, 27 ALR 1235.

held that a physician administering an anæsthetic is under the duty of using ordinary care;[7] but there is also authority to the effect that his skill and proficiency are not to be measured by the usual and ordinary skill possessed by other physicians, but by that of persons whose occupation and study gives them an equal or better knowledge as to its use than is possessed by general practitioners;[8] and that a dentist, in putting a patient under the influence of an anæsthetic, depriving him of the use of his faculties, is required to use the highest professional skill and diligence to avoid every possible danger.[9] But a physician or dentist in administering an anæsthetic is only bound to look to natural and probable effects,[10] and is not answerable for results arising from the peculiar condition or temperament of a patient, of which he had no knowledge.[11]

In selecting an assistant to administer an anæsthetic, a surgeon is under the duty of exercising the same degree of knowledge, skill, and care as is required in performing any part of the operation.[12]

[§ 109] 9. In Application of X-Ray, Radium, and Other Ray Therapy. The general rules[13] requiring the exercise of ordinary and reasonable skill, care, and diligence by physicians and surgeons, subject to qualification as to locality, have been held to apply to, or have been stated with reference to, physicians and other persons operating X-ray apparatus,[14] or applying radium.[15] A physician, in applying X-rays, is not expected to anticipate results arising from peculiar characteristics and conditions of the patient,[16] such as an abnormal hypersensitiveness of the patient's skin, unascertainable before the treatment.[17] It has been held that in the use of a quartz lamp very great care should be exercised, it being comparatively new and not fully understood.[18]

[§ 110] C. Acts or Omissions Constituting or Not Constituting[19]—1. In General. Malpractice suits are based on negligence,[20] and have been said not to differ in their essential ingredients from any other action for damages arising from negligence.[21] While a physician or surgeon is not expected to anticipate results arising from peculiar characteristics and conditions of a patient, of which he has no knowledge,[22] for failure to possess the requisite skill, or to exercise the requisite skill, care, and diligence,[23] as a result of which the patient is injured, a physician or surgeon is liable;[24] and in some jurisdictions

[a] Such a guaranty is without consideration where it is made after the making of a contract for the payment by the patient of a certain sum for the surgeon's services. Wilson v. Blair, 65 Mont. 155, 211 P 289, 27 ALR 1235.

[d] Even if best method is used, surgeon is liable for negligent failure to exercise required skill and care in executing it. Talley v. Whitlock, 199 Ala. 28, 73 S 976.

[e] Gross culpability need not be proved to establish liability for malpractice. Hanners v. Salmon, 216 Ky. 584, 288 SW 307; Link v. Sheldon, 136 N. Y. 1, 32 NE 696; Carpenter v. Blake, 75 N. Y. 12 [aff 10 Hun 358]; Graves v. Santway, 2 Silv. Sup. 67, 6 NYS 892 [aff 127 N. Y. 677 mem, 28 NE 256 mem]. Contra Farquhar v. Murray, 38 Sc. L. Rep. 642, 644 (holding that "there must be either gross ignorance or gross negligence").

[f] Probable consequences.—(1) A physician is chargeable with knowledge of the probable consequences of an injury or of neglect or unskillfulness in treatment (Gerken v. Plimpton, 62 App. Div. 35, 70 NYS 793), (2) or of the probable consequences of delay (Staloch v. Holm, 100 Minn. 276, 111 NW 264, 9 LRANS 712; Du Bois v. Decker, 130 N. Y. 325, 29 NE 313, 27 AmSR 529, 14 LRA 429; Nash v. Royster, 189 N. C. 408, 127 SE 356).

[g] Excessive delay in performing necessary operation is culpable negligence for injury from which a physician is liable. Staloch v. Holm, 100 Minn. 276, 111 NW 264, 9 LRANS 712; Du Bois v. Decker, 130 N. Y. 325, 29 NE 313, 27 AmSR 529, 14 LRA 429; Nash v. Royster, 189 N. C. 408, 127 SE 356.

[h] Pain.—(1) That the patient suffered great pain is not proof of the physician's negligence. Moehlman v. Ransohoff, 17 OhNPNS 241; Thomas v. Register, 110 S. C. 173, 96 SE 517. (2) A physician is liable for pain resulting from a failure to use skill, care, and judgment, whether or not there is an ultimate cure. Frankel v. Wolper, 181 App. Div. 485, 169 NYS 15 [aff 228 N. Y. 582 mem, 127 NE 913 mem].

[i] Assumption of risk by patient.—(1) A patient assumes the risk of a burn from a proper exposure to the X-Ray. Ballance v. Dunnington, 241 Mich. 383, 217 NW 329, 57 ALR 262. (2) Such assumption by a patient, on being informed by the physician that there is danger connected with the treatment, is limited to risks attending careful, skillful application of the X-ray by the physician, and does not include an injury caused by the latter's negligence in applying the X-ray. Hales v. Raines, 162 Mo. A. 46, 141 SW 917. (3) A patient's consent to an operation, which he was told by the physician was the proper course, does not relieve the physician of liability, if he knew or should have known that the operation was unnecessary and improper, and did not explain to the patient its purpose and possible needlessness. Theodore v. Ellis, 141 La. 709, 75 S 655.

[j] That patient's poor condition combined with malpractice to produce the patient's injuries and ailments does not prevent the physician from being liable for the injurious consequences of his lack of skill or care. Robinson v. Crotwell, 175 Ala. 194, 57 S 23; Mullin v. Flanders, 73 Vt. 95, 50 A 813; Gates v. Fleischer, 67 Wis. 504, 30 NW 674.

[k] Foreign matter in wound.—(1) If a physician, by sufficiently careful examination, could have discovered foreign particles in the wound, plaintiff could recover for damage resulting therefrom. Mullinax v. Hord, 174 N. C. 607, 94 SE 426. (2) Leaving open a window during an operation, whereby bugs got into the wound, authorizes a finding of negligence, in the absence of a reasonable explanation. Prewett v. Philpot, 142 Miss. 704, 107 S 880.

[l] Instilling solution into eyes of newborn child.—(1) A physician may be liable in damages for neglect or failure to instill or have instilled in the eyes of a newborn child a proper solution, as required by statute, if blindness or disease of the eyes results from such failure. Covington v. Wyatt, 196 N. C. 367, 145 SE 673. (2) Liability will not necessarily be inferred from a failure to instill the exact solution required, where an effort is made in good faith to comply with the statute. Covington v. Wyatt, supra. (3) Where the duty of complying with the statute is not absolute, the question as to the liability of a physician for injury from instilling a solution containing a larger percentage of silver nitrate than that called for is determined under the general principles of malpractice. Covington v. Wyatt, supra.

[m] In undertaking to put patient to bed after operation, physicians are liable for failure to see that the bed was safe, not containing harmful objects like hot water bottles, and cannot rely on plaintiff's special nurse to protect the patient. Harber v. Gledhill, 60 Utah 391, 208 P 1111.

[n] Under an agreement to cure, a physician is not liable for suffering and disabilities from the cause which he agreed, but failed, to cure, unless he is guilty of malpractice. Frankel v. Wolper, 181 App. Div. 485, 169 NYS 15 [aff 228 N. Y. 582 mem, 127 NE 913 mem].

[o] Other acts or omissions held negligence or malpractice.—(1) Failure of a physician, treating a broken arm, on being informed that cloth saturated with water had been applied, to determine whether infection had resulted from such application, and, if so, to treat it. Baute v. Haynes, 104 SW 272, 31 KyL 876, 12 LRANS 752. (2) Leaving a car, carrying an unconscious patient, close to an open elevator shaft, down which it fell, causing injury to the patient. Haase v. Morton, 138 Iowa 205, 115 NW 921, 16 AnnCas 350. (3) Burning of a patient by a hot water bottle, placed by a surgeon as an incident to the operation. Reeves v. Lutz, 179 Mo. A. 61, 162 SW 280; (4) Burning of a patient's head by the discharge of electricity through a cap placed thereon by the physician, who thereafter left the room, no attendant being present. Frisk v. Cannon, 110 Minn. 438, 126 NW 67, 28 LRANS 262. (5) Pulling a perfectly sound tooth, without justification. Krompoltz v. Hyman, 70 Pa. Super. 581. (6) Failure of a dentist to take proper steps to protect a patient against danger from the presence in her mouth of parts of a tooth broken during extraction. Comeaux v. Miles, (La. A.) 118 S 786. (7) Spilling of part of the contents of a vial of carbolic acid by a dentist upon his patient. Picheloup v. Gibbons, (La. A.) 120 S 504. (8) Throwing of a horse by a veterinary, preparatory to cau-this is the rule by force of statute.[25] Conversely, a physician or surgeon is not liable for injurious consequences to his patient if he exercises the required degree of skill and care.[26] A physician has also been held liable for injuries resulting from his failure to exercise his best judgment.[27] Failure to exercise the required care may be predicated upon things done by the physician that should not have been done,[28] or his negligent failure to do or cause to be done something that should have been done in the particular instance.[29] To afford a basis for an action for malpractice, under these rules, the want of skill or care must be the proximate cause of the injury or death of the patient.[30] The fact that the negligence of other physicians may also have been a contributing cause of the patient's death does not absolve the physician whose negligence was the proximate cause;[31] and bad practice or negligence on terizing treatment, in such a manner as to cause its death. Staples v. Steed, 167 Ala. 241, 52 S 646, AnnCas 1912A 480.

[p] Physician and employer as several tort-feasors.—Where an employee's leg is broken through his employer's negligence, and amputation becomes necessary because of the physician's negligent treatment, the employer and the physician, while each liable for the loss of the leg, are not joint tort-feasors, each being liable only to the extent of the injury done by himself. Staehlin v. Hochdoerfer, (Mo.) 235 SW 1060.

[a] Rule applied to: (1) Dentist. Klitch v. Betts, 89 N. J. L. 348, 98 A 427. (2) Physician applying X-ray. McCoy v. Buck, (Ind. A.) 157 NE 456; Hamilton v. Harris, (Tex. Civ. A.) 223 SW 533.

[b] No insurance of safety from dangerous agencies.—A physician is not an insurer of the safety of his patients from dangerous agencies employed, such as X-ray, electricity, radium, surgical instruments, poison, and anæsthetics. Nixon v. Pfahler, 279 Pa. 377, 124 A 130.

[c] Reliance on other persons present.—(1) A physician relying on an attendant, employed by the patient's husband, to wrap hot irons properly before applying them to the patient, as he directed, is not negligent. Olson v. Bolstad, 161 Minn. 419, 201 NW 918. (2) A physician whose attention is absorbed in giving urgent care to a patient in danger of death after an operation is not responsible if he relies on another person present to give hot applications, such person not being in any sense his agent. Marchand v. Bertrand, 39 Que. Super. 49.

[d] Failure of physician to protest against his advice and outside of his control, and in which he administered the anæsthetic, raises no inference of approval by him. Lawson v. Crane, 83 Vt. 115, 74 A 641.

[e] Failure of drugless physician to operate or advise an operation cannot be the basis of recovery by one who employs him knowing that he belongs to a school of healing which does not operate. Wilcox v. Carroll, 127 Wash. 1, 219 P 34.

[f] Where explosion is caused by improper ingredients in manufacture of containers of anæsthetic gases, by a reputable concern, physicians administering the anæsthetic are not liable for the resulting injury. Wilt v. McCallum, 214 Mo. A. 321, 253 SW 156.

[g] Other acts or omissions held not negligence or malpractice.—(1) A physician's temporarily absenting himself, during treatment of a patient, despite an indication on the hospital chart of a slight rise in temperature, pulse, and respiration. Browning v. Hoffman, 90 W. Va. 568, 111 SE 492. (2) Failure to take certain steps through which the existence of gangrene and the necessity of amputation might have been discovered earlier. Browning v. Hoffman, supra. (3) Not wearing sterilized gown and sterilized rubber gloves while examining a patient and delivering a child. Hammer v. Klegger, 50 S. D. 453, 210 NW 667. (4) Directing an advanced and experienced medical student to administer ether. Levy v. Vaughan, 42 App. (D. C.) 146. (5) A dentist's failure to extract the root of the tooth of a pregnant woman, broken in attempted extraction, and his request that she return next day. Gentile v. De Virgilis, 290 Pa. 50, 138 A 540. (6) A nurse's waiting for the coming of an assistant physician on his regular tour, after discovering unfavorable symptoms, and giving the appropriate treatment herself. Browning v. Hoffman, supra.

"Manifestly, if the condition of the patient was such that death would have ensued, notwithstanding the presence of the pad in her abdomen, there should be no recovery." Barnett v. Brand, 165 Ky. 616, 624, 177 SW 461.

[a] If death is caused by disease not produced by operation, a surgeon, alleged to have caused the death of the patient by unskillfully performing an operation, is not liable. State v. Housekeeper, 70 Md. 162, 16 A 382, 14 AmSR 340, 2 LRA 587.

[b] Practicing medicine without a license, in violation of statute, can be the basis of an action for malpractice only if such violation was the proximate cause of the injury. Brown v. Shyne, 242 N. Y. 176, 151 NE 197, 44 ALR 1407.

[c] Failure to report communicable disease, in violation of a rule of the state board of health, while evidence of negligence, is not actionable negligence creating civil liability, unless it was the proximate cause of the injury. Davis v. Rodman, 147 Ark. 385, 227 SW 612, 13 ALR 1459.

[d] Physician's direction to attendant to place a hot iron in the patient's bed was not the proximate cause of injury arising from the burning of the patient's feet, as he could not reasonably have anticipated that an ordinarily prudent person would place the iron so as to burn the patient. Malkowski v. Graham, 169 Wis. 398, 172 NW 785, 4 ALR 1524.

[e] Refusal of physician to attend patient at latter's home, it being the physician's custom not to treat patients outside of his office, is not the proximate cause of the patient's death, where it is not shown that there was an emergency or that the patient would not have died if the physician had attended him. Urrutia v. Patino, (Tex. Civ. A.) 10 SW (2d) 582.

[f] Rule applied to dentists.—Matuschka v. Murphy, 173 Wis. 484, 180 NW 821.

Proximate cause:

Generally see Negligence §§ 477–499.

As affecting grounds of action for causing death see Death § 56.

31. Kruger v. Bossingham, 152 Minn. 243, 188 NW 324. See Talley v. Whitlock, 199 Ala. 28, 73 S 976 (holding that the subsequent act of a hospital's resident physician in dealing with a drainage tube in the patient's body is no defense for negligence chargeable to the operating physician in leaving it there, or improperly placing and securing it, unless the former's act was the sole proximate cause of the injury).

the part of a physician cannot be justified by his reliance on the diagnosis[32] or advice[33] of another physician. A mere want of due care or skill on the part of the physician or surgeon, not resulting in injury, gives no right to recover[34] even nominal damages;[35] and his ignorance is immaterial if the practice employed is correct.[36] A physician or surgeon is not liable as negligent because of the mere fact of a want of success or a poor result from his treatment,[37] unless it is shown to be due to a want of due skill or care, or of both, on his part;[38] nor is the fact that he predicted recovery sooner than it took place an element of negligence.[39]

Treatment at a particular place cannot be required of the physician by the patient, unless the former's reason for refusing is purely capricious;[40] and a physician whose custom is to treat patients only at his office is not negligent in refusing to attend a patient at the latter's home.[41]

[§ 111] 2. Refusal To Take Case. A physician is not bound to render professional services to everyone who applies,[42] and may refuse to respond to the call of a patient unable to compensate him;[43] and he is therefore not liable for arbitrarily refusing to respond to a call, although he is the only physician available.[44]

[§ 112] 3. Following Established Practice.[45] If a physician or surgeon follows the established and approved practice, and no gross error is shown, he is not liable for injuries caused by the treatment.[46] The adoption of one of two or more accepted and recognized methods of treatment, rather than another, is not negligence or evidence of negligence,[47] even though there is a more modern method than the one employed,[48] or a modern method is employed to the exclusion of one previously adopted as standard,[49] a physician or surgeon not being required to choose at his peril between recognized methods.[50] It has been broadly stated that any deviation from the established mode of practice is sufficient to charge a physician with liability in case of any injury arising to the patient.[51] When a particular mode of treatment is upheld by a consensus of opinion of the members of the profession, it should be followed,[52] and if a physician sees fit to experiment with some other mode, he does so at his own peril, being liable for resulting injury to the patient.[53] If, however, the character of the injury or disease is such that the patient cannot endure the most approved method of treatment in such cases, then a failure to resort to such treatment does not show a want of skill or negligence.[54] When the treatment adopted is not in accordance with established practice, but is positively injurious, the case has been said to be not one of negligence, but of want of skill.[55] insure the correctness of his diagnosis,[58] a physician or surgeon is required to use reasonable skill and care in determining through diagnosis the condition of the patient and the nature of his ailment,[59] and is liable for a failure, due to a want of the requisite skill or care, to diagnose correctly the nature of the ailment, with resulting injury or detriment to the patient.[60] So, too, it has been held that if a physician, by the exercise of reasonable care and skill, ought to discover that an ailment is incurable, that it will not yield to usual treatment, and that the patient will not be benefited, and fails to make such discovery and advise the patient thereof, he is guilty of negligence.[61] The fact that information and not medical treatment was sought does not excuse negligence in making the diagnosis.[62] On the other hand, a physician or surgeon is not responsible for a mistake in diagnosis if he uses the proper degree of skill and care.[63] A general practitioner has been held not liable for making a wrong diagnosis of a very rare disease, which can only be detected by a skilled expert.[64] Nor does a mere omission by a patient's attending physician to use ordinary skill in diagnosing his disease before reporting it to the board of health as a case of smallpox give a right of action.[65] Whether a physician was negligent in making a diagnosis must be determined in the light of conditions existing and facts known at the time thereof, and not in the light of knowledge gained through subsequent developments.[66] It has been held that unless improper treatment fol-

Quinn v. Donovan, 85 Ill. 194.

[b] The mere use of approved tests by a physician in determining whether a patient's shoulder has been dislocated is not a sufficient exercise of the required skill and care, but he must exercise such skill and care in making the tests, ascertaining from them the presence of any injury, and treating the patient. lows, a wrong diagnosis gives no right of action;[67] but that it is no defense to an action for injuries resulting from an incorrect diagnosis, that the same result would have ensued from another disease of the patient, which was in its primary stages at the time of the diagnosis.[68]

[§ 114] 5. Errors of Judgment.[69] It has been broadly held that a physician or surgeon is not liable for an honest error or mistake in judgment.[70] However, a limitation of this broad rule is recognized in cases that exempt from liability for errors of judgment only where there is a reasonable doubt as to the nature of the physical condition involved[71] or as to the proper course to be followed,[72] or where good judgments may differ.[73] Another limitation of the broad rule above stated[74] is found in cases that hold that a qualified physician[75] is not liable for an error of judgment if he applies ordinary and reasonable skill and care,[76] or his best judgment,[77]

[a] Reason for exception from general rule of negligence.—The reasons for excepting malpractice cases from the rule that the exercise of defendant's best judgment is no defense to an action for negligence are to be found in the character of emergencies physicians meet which often preclude deliberation; in the nature of their undertaking which contracts for individual judgment and skill; in the peculiarity of the human constitution, which presents difficulties not arising from insensate matter; in the nature of medical science, which is based on progressive knowledge; and in the inherent uncertainty of the expert testimony involved. or keeps within recognized and approved methods[78] or the common practice;[79] or if he forms his judgment after a careful examination.[80] Thus, where there is more than one recognized and approved method of treatment applicable to the case, a physician or surgeon is not liable for an honest mistake of judgment in selecting a method.[81] Whether errors of judgment will or will not make a physician or surgeon liable in a given case depends not merely upon the fact that he may be ordinarily skillful, but on whether he has treated the case skillfully or has exercised in its treatment such reasonable skill and diligence as is ordinarily exercised in his profession.[82] The exemption from liability does not extend to a case where the error occurs by reason of a physician's lack of the knowledge which he should possess or his failure to exercise proper care;[83] thus a physician is liable for the consequences if the error of judgment is so gross as to be inconsistent with the exercise of that degree of skill and care which it is his duty to apply.[84] It has been held that there is a fundamental difference in malpractice cases between mere errors of judgment and negligence in previously collecting data essential to a proper conclusion, or in subsequent conduct in the selection and use of instrumentalities with which the physician may execute his judgment;[85] thus, if he omits to inform himself, by proper examination, as to the facts and circumstances, and injury results, he is not relieved of liability for errors of judgment.[86]

In operating in an emergency, a surgeon is not liable for an honest error in judgment.[87]

Unqualified or unskilled physician. A physician not possessing the requisite qualifications,[88] or one not possessing competent skill,[89] is not exempted from liability because his mistake was caused by an error of judgment.

tion, is required to exercise reasonable and ordinary skill and care.[91] The obligation of continuing attention can be terminated only by the cessation of the necessity which gave rise to the relation of physician and patient,[92] or by the discharge of the physician by the patient,[93] or by the physician's withdrawing from the case, after giving the patient reasonable notice, so as to enable him to secure other medical attendance,[94] a physician having the right to withdraw from a case upon giving the proper notice.[95] As otherwise stated, the rule is that a physician is under the duty of treating a patient so long as the professional relation between them lasts.[96] But a physician called only for a specific occasion or service is under no duty to continue his visits or treatment thereafter.[97] In determining when his attendance may safely and properly be discontinued, a physician or surgeon is bound to use reasonable and ordinary care and skill.[98] A physician who contracts without qualification to treat one person cannot excuse himself for failure to attend on the ground that another patient required his attention.[99]

[§ 116] b. Unwarranted Abandonment. The unwarranted abandonment of a case after its assumption will render a physician or surgeon liable in damages,[1] at least where he does not give reasonable notice,[2] or provide a competent physician in his place;[3] and he is also liable for increased pain and suffering resulting therefrom.[4]

[§ 117] c. Frequency of Visits. A physician is not chargeable with neglect in allowing intervals to elapse between his visits, where the patient needs no attention during the intervals,[5] but he is negligent in doing so where attention is needed.[6] It has been held that, while a physician cannot be excused for harmful neglect of some of his patients on the ground of the large number of patients taken on,[7] the frequency of the visits to be made is a question for the physician to determine, if he uses ordinary judgment.[8]

[§ 118] d. Temporarily Leaving Practice. A physician has a right to leave his practice temporarily if he makes provision for the attendance of a competent physician upon his patients.[9] If he notifies a patient that he is going away, and indicates who will attend him in his stead, no neglect can be imputed to him.[10] But if he remains away longer than he had informed the patient he would, he is liable for injury resulting from the lack of treatment during his absence.[11]

[§ 119] e. Effect of Discharge. When a physician has been discharged by a patient, he is relieved of responsibility,[12] if his treatment of the case was proper up to the time of his discharge;[13] and he cannot be held liable for injury arising from subsequent treatment by another physician.[14] A surgeon discharged by a patient cannot be held liable for an injury resulting from the surgeon's failure to take a step which properly should not have been taken until after the time at which he was discharged.[15] But if after his discharge the physician or surgeon volunteers and offers advice which deceives or misleads the patient, he is responsible for injuries arising therefrom.[16]

[§ 120] 7. Operating with or without Consent—a. In General. Where a patient is in possession of his faculties and in such physical health as to be able to consult about his condition, and no emergency exists making it impracticable to confer with him, his consent is a prerequisite to a surgical operation by his physician;[17] and a surgeon who performs an operation without his patient's consent, express or implied, commits an assault for which he is liable in damages.[18] The patient's consent may be implied from circumstances;[19] thus, if he voluntarily submits to an operation, his consent will be presumed, unless he was the victim of false and fraudulent misrepresentations.[20] If the patient is for any reason not competent to consent, the consent of some one who, under the circumstances, would be legally authorized to give it may be obtained.[21] Where an emergency arises calling for immediate action for the preservation of the life or health of the patient, and it is impracticable to obtain his consent or the consent of anyone authorized to speak for him, it is the duty of the physician to perform such operation as good surgery demands, without such consent.[22] And if, in the course of an operation to which the patient consented, the physician discovers conditions not anticipated before the operation was commenced, and which, if not removed, would endanger the life of the patient, he will, although no express consent be obtained or given, be justified in extending the operation to remove and overcome them.[23] But the removal of a bone during the course of an operation, contrary to the understanding between the surgeon and the patient, renders the surgeon liable in damages.[24] The implied appointment of the surgeon as the legal representative, during the period of unconsciousness, of a patient who has appointed no other person, does not give the surgeon a license to operate on the patient against his will or by subterfuge,[25] or to perform a different operation than that consented to, or one involving risks and results not contemplated.[26]

[a] Consent presumed despite direct prohibition of performance of operation under certain circumstances. Beatty v. Cullingworth, 44 Cent LJ 153.

[b] Exploratory incision for diagnosis authorized.—Directions by a patient to a physician authorizing an

[§ 121] b. Necessity of Consent of Spouse or Parent. It has been held that a surgeon is justified in performing an operation upon a married woman with her consent, when he deems the operation necessary, whether her husband consents or not;[27] but other cases, apparently assuming that the husband's consent is necessary, hold that, by placing his wife under the care of a surgeon for treatment, a husband impliedly consents to such operations as may be found necessary or expedient.[28] A father's consent to the performance of an operation upon a child seventeen years of age has been held unnecessary;[29] and it has been held that in case of an emergency a surgeon may operate on a child without waiting for authority from the parents, where it appears impracticable to get it.[30] But in the absence of an emergency an operation performed on a child without the consent of the parents is a legal wrong;[31] and adult sisters of the child, who are its temporary custodians, have no authority to give consent under such circumstances.[32] Only a reasonable and diligent effort on the part of the physician to find the parents and advise them of the situation has been required.[33]

[§ 122] 8. Giving Instructions. It is the duty of a physician or surgeon, in dealing with a case, to give the patient or his family or attendants all necessary and proper instructions as to the care and attention to be given to the patient and the cautions to be observed;[34] and a failure to do so is negligence which will render him liable for resulting injury.[35]

operation for a specific ailment by clear implication authorizes him to diagnose the case to discover the cause, and to make any necessary initial exploratory incisions for that purpose. King v. Carney, 85 Okl. 62, 204 P 270.

ure to exercise requisite care or skill, a foreign substance to enter or remain in the body of the person operated upon, omits the discharge of, or violates, the duty the law imposes upon him.[36] Thus the requirement of care and skill has been held to extend to the removal by the surgeon, as part of the operation, of sponges or gauze pads used by him during the course of the operation.[37] A surgeon's failure to remove a sponge before closing an incision has been held negligence per se,[38] or necessarily negligence;[39] and leaving a gauze pad in the patient's body has been held negligence,[40] as has the unexplained leaving of a drainage tube.[41] On the other hand, there is authority for the holding that leaving a sponge is not negligence per se,[42] nor conclusively negligence,[43] and that no liability follows therefrom if reasonable and ordinary care is exercised in keeping track of and removing the sponges.[44] Where the patient's condition is critical, and the paramount duty is to complete the operation in the shortest possible time, the failure to remove a sponge has been held an accidental and excusable slip or inadvertence, and not actionable negligence.[45] The fact that part of a hypodermic needle, used in a tonsil operation, remained in the patient's body, has been held not to show malpractice;[46] and a physician has been held under no obligation to inform a patient of the leaving of part of a needle in his body during an operation, when telling would endanger the success thereof.[47] Some authorities hold that a surgeon cannot relieve himself of liability for injury to a patient caused by leaving sponges or pads, by reliance on a custom or rule requiring the attending nurse to count the sponges or pads used and removed, and on the nurse's statement as to the count;[48] but there is authority to the contrary,[49] at least where the operation is performed by the surgeon at a hospital not owned and controlled by him, assisted by nurses not his employees.[50]

An assisting physician, whose part in the operation is to insert and withdraw sponges, cannot escape liability for his negligent failure to withdraw sponges on the ground that he was an assistant.[51]

[§ 124] 10. Dealing with Contagious Diseases. It is the duty of a physician who is attending a patient afflicted with a contagious or infectious disease to exercise care in advising and warning members of the family,[52] and others who are liable to exposure,[53] of the existence and nature of the danger from the disease; to avoid doing any act which would tend to spread the infection;[54] and to take all necessary precautionary measures to prevent its spread to other patients attended.[55] A physician who fails to give such warning[56] is negligent,[57] and is liable in damages to any person injured as the direct and proximate result of his negligence.[58] Likewise, a physician may be negligent in wrongly advising persons liable to exposure to infection or contagion that there is no such danger.[59] A physician who, knowing that he has an infectious disease, continues to visit a patient without apprising him of the fact and without proper precautions on his own part, and communicates to him this disease, is responsible for the consequent damage thus produced by his own wrongful act,[60] including the suffering, danger, and loss of time, as well as the expense necessarily occasioned by the second disease.[61]

[§ 125] 11. Intrusion of Unprofessional Assistant. Where a physician takes an unprofessional, unmarried man with him to attend a confinement case, there being no emergency, both are liable in damages to the patient.[62]

[§ 126] 12. Mistake in Prescription. Where the injury or death of the patient results from the negligence of the practitioner in writing an erroneous prescription, he is liable,[63] even though the druggist who compounds the prescription is also guilty of negligence,[64] and even though the prescription was taken to another druggist than the one to whom he had directed it.[65] But a physician is not liable for the druggist's negligence in compounding a prescription properly written by the physician.[66]

[§ 127] 13. Fraud and Deceit; Misinforming Patient.[67] It is the duty of a physician to act with the utmost good faith toward his patient, and if he knows that he cannot accomplish a cure, or that the treatment adopted will probably be of no benefit, it is his duty to advise his patient of these facts, and if he fails to do so he is guilty of a breach of duty.[68] Likewise, if the physician represents to the patient that he can be cured, without knowledge whether the representation is true or false, and the patient accepts treatment in reliance thereon, and is not cured, the physician is liable in an action for deceit.[69] But to recover on account of deceit based on the physician's statement that he could and would cure the patient, the latter must not only prove that the representation was false, but also that it was made with a fraudulent intent.[70] While failure of a physician to warn a patient of possible danger from a remedy is not negligence per se,[71] a physician who misleads a patient by not only failing to give him such warning, after which the patient would have refused the treatment, but by affirmatively assuring him of a cure thereby, is liable for the harmful consequences of the treatment.[72] Where a physician is not guilty of malpractice in failing to remove one of the patient's organs, his false representation that he removed it is not actionable as fraud.[73]

[§ 128] 14. Wrongful Certificate of Insanity or Inebriety.[74] A physician may be held liable for falsely certifying the insanity of a person;[75] but without statutory provisions to that effect, a civil action for damages against a physician for certifying to a person's insanity cannot be based on the insufficiency of the methods which he pursued in reaching and certifying a correct conclusion.[76] In an action for falsely certifying, through malice or negligence, to the insanity of plaintiff, the falsehood, and not the insufficiency of the certificate, is the ground of action against defendant.[77] A physician who signs a certificate of insanity which is false, without exercising ordinary care and prudence in making his examination, and without making due inquiry into the question of sanity, is liable to an action for damages.[78] Nor is he the less liable for the want of such due care and inquiry because he has acted bona fide.[79] But a physician who signs a certificate of insanity when the patient is sane is not liable therefor where the certificate was signed after making an examination, and the mistake was due merely to an error of judgment, provided the physician brings to the case the learning, care, and diligence required by law.[80] In such an action the burden is on plaintiff to show negligence,[81] and also to show that at the time the certificate of insanity was given he was in fact sane.[82] Defendant may show under what circumstances and on what information he acted in making such certificate.[83] If such evidence does not go to the extent of a justification in case the certificate is found to be false, it is proper evidence to be considered in awarding damages.[84]

Certificate of inebriety. In Massachusetts, under the statute relating to commitment for inebriety, the privilege of witnesses attaches to physicians issuing a certificate of inebriety, so that they are not liable for negligence in so doing, in the absence of bad faith or malice.[85]

[§ 129] D. Effect of Admission of Want of Sufficient Skill or Care.[86] If a practitioner frankly informs a patient of his want of skill, or the patient is in some other way fully aware of it, the latter cannot complain of the lack of that which he knew did not exist.[87] An admission to be sufficient must be an admission of negligence or of lack of the skill ordinarily required for the performance of the work undertaken.[88]

[§ 130] E. Effect of Patient's Contributory Negligence—1. In General. The general rules with regard to the effect of contributory negligence on the right to recover for personal injuries[89] apply in actions for injuries alleged to have arisen from the negligence or malpractice of a physician or surgeon, and it is uniformly held that, where negligence on the part of the patient or those acting for him proximately conduced or contributed to the injury complained of, there can be no recovery.[90] But it has been held that if both the patient and the physician have been negligent, and the injuries due to the respective negligence of each can be separated, the physician is liable for the injuries due to his own want of skill or care.[91] Negligence on the part of a patient is not a bar to recovery where it did not contribute proximately to the injury caused by defendant's malpractice.[92]

Injury from patient's own act. A physician is not liable for an injury caused by the voluntary act of the patient.[93] Thus a surgeon who performs an operation on the insistence of the patient, despite his advice that it is unnecessary and improper, cannot be held liable on the ground that the operation was improper and injurious.[94]

Interference by the patient while the physician is performing his duties, which contributes to the injury, will bar a recovery.[95]

Even though no instructions are given the patient, he is required to exercise such ordinary prudence as would be expected of a person situated in his condition, and a failure on his part to exercise this prudence will prevent recovery.[96]

[§ 131] 2. Failure To Follow Instructions. It is the duty of a patient to coöperate with his physician and conform to the necessary prescriptions and treatment, and follow all reasonable and proper instructions given,[97] and a failure on the part of the patient in this respect which contributes to injury claimed to have arisen from the physician's negligence or malpractice will bar recovery therefor,[98] even though his compliance is prevented by the pressure of pain,[99] or though his refusal to carry out the instructions is due to his ignorance of the consequences of such failure.[1]

[§ 132] 3. Refusal To Permit Proper Treatment. A patient is bound to submit to the treatment prescribed by his surgeon, if it is such as a surgeon of ordinary skill would sanction;[2] and a surgeon who is prevented from curing an ailment by the refusal of the patient to submit to proper treatment cannot be held liable for resulting damages.[3] Where a patient is incompetent to be consulted, and the members of his family having him in charge refuse to allow an operation or other proper treatment proposed by the physician, he is relieved of liability for the course pursued or for injuries resulting from failure to apply the treatment.[4]

[§ 133] 4. Failure To Return for Treatment. A patient who, after receiving treatment, fails to return to the physician or surgeon for further treatment, as instructed, is guilty of contributory negligence preventing recovery for injurious consequences from such failure.[5] But a patient's failure to return for further treatment, after discovering that he is not improving, because of the physician's negligent treatment, does not bar recovery for injuries from such improper treatment;[6] and the mere fact that a patient who believes he has been injured by the negligence of his physician discharges him or quits his care and employs another is not in itself evidence of contributory negligence.[7]

[§ 134] 5. Failure To Secure Assistance Requested. The refusal or neglect of the patient to procure needed assistance requested by the physician is contributory negligence constituting a defense to an action for injurious treatment.[8]

[§ 135] 6. Failure To Consult Another Physician. The patient's failure to consult another physician, after defendant physician has assured him of the propriety and success of the treatment given, is not contributory negligence, unless he is fully aware that his injury has not been, and is not being, properly treated.[9]

[§ 136] 7. Contributory Negligence after Malpractice. Where liability for negligence or malpractice has been incurred by a physician, subsequent negligence of the patient, which aggravates the injury primarily sustained at the hands of the physician, does not discharge the latter from liability, but only goes in mitigation of damages.[10]

[§ 137] F. Liability to Gratuitous or Charity Patient.[11] A physician may refuse to respond to the call of a patient unable to compensate him;[12] but if he undertakes the treatment of a patient gratuitously, his liabilities for negligence or malpractice are the same as in the case of any other patient.[13] So a physician employed by a city to treat patients at the city almshouse is liable to one of such patients who is injured through the physician's negligence, although there is no contractual relation between such patient and the physician.[14]

[§ 138] G. Liability of Unqualified Persons.[15] One who, although not duly qualified, holds himself out as a physician to persons who believe him to be a physician and employ him as such is liable for a failure to exercise the degree of care, skill, and diligence required of qualified practitioners, and for resulting detriment,[16] whether compensated for his services or not.[17] But failure to obtain a license as required by law gives rise to no remedy, if it has caused no injury;[18] and such failure is not itself a basis for an inference of negligence causing injury to the patient.[19] Likewise, failure to register in accordance with the statutory provision, coupled with a showing of the treatment given, is an insufficient basis for a charge of malpractice.[20] A person who renders aid to the sick either as a volunteer or upon request as a friend or neighbor, but without having or professing to have special qualifications, incurs no professional responsibility,[21] even though his service, if performed by one claiming to be competent, might justly be characterized as highly negligent and unskillful,[22] his duty being only to perform the service honestly and to the best of his ability.[23] If an unregistered practitioner is known to be unregistered, he must attain only the skill which he professes or announces.[24]

A street railway company, being unauthorized to practice medicine or surgery, cannot be guilty of malpractice.[25]

[§ 139] H. Liability for Negligence or Malpractice of Others[26]—1. Partner. Pursuant to general rules[27] partners in the practice of medicine are all liable for an injury to a patient resulting from the lack of skill or the negligence, either in omission or commission, of any one of the partners, within the scope of their partnership business;[28] but, for an injury resulting from the act of one partner outside of the common business, the offending partner is alone responsible.[29]

[§ 140] 2. Physician Employed with Another on Same Case. Physicians employed together by the patient, and diagnosing or treating the case together, without withdrawal by, or discharge of, either, owe the same duty and are jointly liable for any negligence.[30] Where two physicians are independently employed on the same case, they may, in the absence of instructions to the contrary, make such division of the service as in their best judgment the circumstances may require.[31] Each of the physicians so employed is answerable both for his own conduct[32] and for the negligent acts or omissions of the other which he permits without objection,[33] or which, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, he should have observed.[34] A physician called specially and only for particular occasions is not liable for the negligent acts or omissions of another physician in his absence.[35]

[§ 141] 3. Physician Assisted. A physician who merely arranges for an operation by another, not his associate, employer, or employee, and lends casual assistance at the operation, is not jointly liable for the negligence of the physician operating.[36] A physician who merely administers an anæsthetic to a patient operated upon is not liable for the negligence of the operating surgeon.[37]

[§ 142] 4. Substitute or Other Recommended Physician. A physician who, because of intended absence or other reason, is unable or unwilling to assume or continue the treatment of a case, and recommends or sends another physician, is not liable for injuries resulting from the latter's want of skill or care,[38] unless the recommended physician is in knowledge thereof,[49] or has no connection therewith,[50] or if it is not discoverable by him in the exercise of ordinary care,[51] or unless he is negligent in permitting them to attend the patient.[52] But it has been held that, where a hospital nurse, although not in the regular employ of an operating surgeon, is under his special supervision and control during the operation, the relation of master and servant exists,[53] and that the surgeon is liable, under the doctrine of respondeat superior, for the nurse's negligence.[54]

[§ 145] I. Actions*—1. Nature and Form. The nature and form of an action to recover damages occasioned by the negligence or malpractice of a physician or surgeon are controlled by the principles applicable to civil actions generally.[55] Owing to the nature of the relation between a physician and surgeon and a patient,[56] the latter ordinarily may sue the former either in contract or in tort.[57] Whether the action is in contract or in tort depends upon whether it appears from a construction of the complaint that the gravamen of the action is a breach of the contract or a breach of the duty imposed by law by reason of defendant's calling, and the relation between the parties.[58] Ordinarily the gist of an action against a physician for malpractice is negligence, and not the violation of the contract of employment,[59] but where an express promise on the part of the physician to treat the patient is alleged and counted upon, the action is in contract, and not in tort.[60] It has been held that, when the action is in tort, case is the proper form of action,[61] and that, although an operation is performed with malice, the patient having consented thereto, no recovery in trespass can be had therefor.[62]

[§ 146] 2. Conditions Precedent. Statutes sometimes require the giving of a written notice of claim as a condition precedent to the right to maintain an action to recover damages for injuries to the person.[63] Actions against physicians or surgeons for malpractice have been held to come within the provisions of such statutes.[64] It has been held that the statute applies regardless of whether the action be in tort or on contract.[65]

[§ 147] 3. Limitations. Actions for the recovery of damages occasioned by the negligence or malpractice of a physician are, in the absence of express statutory provisions, controlled by the limitations applicable to actions for damages generally.[66] In some jurisdictions a specific limitation for the action is prescribed by statute.[67] In the absence of any valid excuse for delay,[68] the running of the statutory time bars the action.[69] It has been held that a statute limiting the time within which actions for "malpractice" must be brought applies to actions against unlicensed, as well as licensed, practitioners.[70] In determining when the cause of action is deemed to have accrued within the meaning of such statutes the rules applicable to actions for personal injuries generally apply.[71]

[a] Reason for rule.—"The claim is made by the plaintiff that, if the two-year statute is applied to irregular practitioners, it would grant to them the same indulgence as a duly licensed physician and surgeon. I think any consideration of this kind is based upon a wrong assumption. I do not think that the two-year Statute of Limitation as to malpractice was adopted for the purpose of granting an indulgence to duly licensed physicians and surgeons, simply because they were regular and legal practitioners, but that the statute was passed because of the uncertainty of the results attending the treatment of disease in the first place, and the increasing difficulty of tracing such results as time goes on. Age, inherited traits, latent diseases, debilitated conditions, sometimes render the most skillful treatment unavailing." Monohan v. Devinny, 131 Misc. 248, 250, 225 NYS 601 [mod on other grounds 223 App. Div. 547, 229 NYS 60].

ered in preceding sections,[72] as, for example, matters relating to contributory negligence,[73] and the absence of responsibility for the acts of a person not under the direction or control of defendant.[74] It is no defense to a suit for malpractice that defendant was practicing in violation of a statute making it an offense to practice without first obtaining a license.[75] Nor can a physician not belonging to one of the regular schools of medicine, such as a clairvoyant, relieve himself from liability by the contention that the patient was negligent in employing him with full knowledge of his methods of diagnosis and prescription.[76] A statute holding empirics to the same accountability for malpractice as licensed physicians and surgeons, and providing that such malpractice may be given in evidence in bar of any action for services rendered by such persons,[77] does not affect the right of a licensed physician or surgeon to set up the defense of res judicata founded upon a judgment denying plaintiff compensation for his services in an action in which the malpractice was set up as a bar.[78]

Consent to the abandonment of the case by a physician may be a defense to a subsequent action for malpractice based upon failure to give the patient the attention which his condition required.[79] This, however, is not true if such consent was obtained by false representations with respect to the necessity of further treatment.[80]

Contract exempting from liability. It has been asserted that a physician or surgeon may perhaps protect himself from liability for malpractice by a special contract that he shall not be so liable.[81]

Consent to illegal operation. It has been held that consent of the patient to the performance of an illegal operation constitutes no defense to an action to recover damages suffered from the operation,[82] or from subsequent unskilled treatment in connection therewith.[83] However, the contrary has also been held.[84]

Excessive demands upon services. The fact that the physician or surgeon had undertaken more patients than he could properly care for is no defense to an action based on neglect properly to care for one of them.[85]

Gratuitous services. The fact that the services of the physician or surgeon were rendered gratuitously is no defense to an action based on failure to exercise reasonable care and skill.[86]

Advice of other physicians. The mere fact that the physician in treating the patient acted upon the advice of another physician does not constitute a defense to an action based on unskilled treatment.[87]

[§ 149] 5. Pleading—a. Declaration, Complaint, or Petition. The rules relating to declarations, complaints, or petitions in civil actions generally,[88] particularly those governing actions for negligence,[89] apply in an action for damages occasioned by the negligence or malpractice of a physician or surgeon.[90] Every fact necessary to constitute a cause of action must be alleged,[91] and with reasonable definiteness and certainty.[92] Thus it is essential that the duty of the physician or surgeon to the person injured be alleged with reasonable definiteness and certainty,[93] as well as the breach of duty complained of,[94] and the causal relation between the

[a] Complaint held too vague, uncertain, or indefinite.—(1) Uncertainty with respect to the name and nature of the disease alleged to have been improperly treated and with respect to whether negligence in the treatment of a disease correctly diagnosed or a wrong diagnosis was relied upon. Osborn v. Carey, 24 Ida. 158, 132 P 967. (2) Uncertainty with respect to whether the drug which caused the injury was negligently and improperly prescribed for the malady, or whether, although properly prescribed for the malady, it was directed to be taken in an improper manner, or in improper quantities, or with improper frequency. Billesbach v. Larkey, 161 Cal. 649, 120 P 31.

[a] Employment of physician sufficiently alleged.—Schillinger v. Savage, 186 Ind. 189, 115 NE 321.
[b] Duty to advise parents with respect to danger of contracting infectious disease from child sufficiently alleged.—Skillings v. Adams, 143 Minn. 323, 173 NW 663.
[c] Professional character of defendant sufficiently alleged.—A petition for malpractice, alleging that defendant "is a physician . . . engaged in the practice of medicine . . . and has been so engaged for several years last past," is sufficient, without alleging that he was a physician when he treated his patient. Bower v. Self, 68 Kan. 825, 75 P 1021.
94. Billesbach v. Larkey, 161 Cal. 649, 120 P 31; Foreman v. Hunter Lumber Co., 36 Cal. A. 763, 173 P 408; De Hart v. Elnire, 121 Ind. 242, 23 NE 77; Hawley v. Williams, 90 Ind. 160; Barney v. Pinkham, 29 Nebr. 350, 45 NW 694, 26 AmSR 389; Fabian v. Schinasi, 176 App. Div. 259, 162 NYS 1073.
[a] Breach of duty sufficiently alleged.—(1) Failure to ascertain that a tendon was severed and failure to sew it up. Dunn v. Dufficy, 194 Cal. 383, 228 P 1029. (2) Failure properly to care for patient following an op-breach of duty and the injuries complained of.[95] Where the breach of duty relied upon is negligence in the treatment of the patient, it is not sufficient merely to state that certain acts not negligent in themselves were done or omitted by the physician or surgeon without alleging that they were negligently done or omitted,[96] even though the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is relied upon;[97] and such a petition is insufficient under a statute prescribing the contents of a petition as a statement of facts constituting plaintiff's cause of action.[98] A complaint alleging a course of treatment entirely consistent with the physician's exercise of all necessary care and skill, but alleging nonsuccess of the treatment, is insufficient to charge negligence or malpractice.[99] The terms of the contract by which the physician or surgeon is employed need not be alleged.[1] Nor is it necessary to allege the consideration to be paid,[2] that any consideration was to be paid,[3] or that it was the physician's duty to act skillfully.[4] Nor is it necessary to aver mere underlying evidential facts.[5]

Matters of defense need not be alleged,[6] unless the facts constituting the cause of action cannot otherwise be completely alleged.[7]

Contributory negligence. In those jurisdictions wherein it is required in actions founded upon negligence generally,[8] freedom from contributory negligence must be alleged in actions founded upon the failure of a physician or surgeon to exercise ordinary care and skill.[9] It has been held that, even though such allegation is necessary, the omission is cured where the issue is fully made up by the answer and reply.[10]

Special damages. In accord with the general rule with respect to pleading special damages,[11] allegations of special damages in actions against a physician or surgeon for negligence or malpractice are sufficient where they are sufficiently definite to apprise the adverse party of the probable evidence which will be introduced by plaintiff and to enable him to prepare his defense.[12]

Amendment. A plaintiff in an action to recover damages for malpractice by a physician may be allowed to amend his complaint to correspond with the proof.[13]

[§ 150] b. Plea or Answer. The rules relating to pleas or answers in civil actions generally,[14] particularly those relating to actions for negligence,[15] are applicable to the plea or answer in an action for injuries sustained by reason of a breach of duty on the part of a physician or surgeon.[16] Thus matters of defense which are covered by the general issue need not be specially pleaded,[17] and a special plea of matters amounting to the general issue is subject to de-eration. Blackburn v. Curd, 106 SW 1186, 32 KyL 789. (3) Failure properly to dress a leg wound. Zirkler v. Robertson, 30 N. S. 61. (4) Failure properly to treat a fractured leg. Carpenter v. McDavitt, 53 Mo. A. 393; Stokes v. Long, 52 Mont. 470, 159 P 28; Morrill v. Tegarden, 19 Nebr. 534, 26 NW 202; Hills v. Shaw, 69 Or. 460, 137 P 229. (5) Failure properly to treat a gunshot wound. Mullinax v. Hord, 174 N. C. 607, 94 SE 426. (6) Failure to secure drainage tube in the first instance and failure later to attach it securely after discovery that it was loose. Burris v. Titzell, 189 Iowa 1322, 177 NW 557, 179 NW 851. (7) Improper treatment of child's ear. Peck v. Henderson, 22 Ala. A. 541, 118 S 258 [certiorari den 218 Ala. 233, 118 S 262]. (8) Leaving draining tube in the cut made by a surgical operation. Talley v. Whitlock, 199 Ala. 28, 73 S 976. (9) Neglect to attend patient following an operation. Burroughs v. Crichton, 48 App. (D. C.) 596, 4 ALR 1529. (10) Performance of unnecessary operation. Markart v. Zeimer, 67 Cal. A. 363, 227 P 683. (11) Prescription of improper, inappropriate, and harmful remedies. Hunter v. Burroughs, 123 Va. 113, 96 SE 360. (12) Unnecessary cutting of sphincter and muscle while operating for hemorrhoids. Hughes v. Weaver, (Ga. A.) 148 SE 12. (13) Unskillful taking of X-ray picture. Ragin v. Zimmerman, (Cal.) 276 P 107.

[b] Breach of duty insufficiently alleged.—(1) Improper treatment of fractured leg. Martin v. Greer, 31 Ga. A. 625, 121 SE 688. (2) Improper treatment of strained leg ligaments. MacKeown v. Baldwin, 59 Cal. A. 674, 211 P 477.

[a] Causal connection sufficiently alleged.—(1) Improper administration of neosalvarsan and subsequent death of patient. Thaggard v. Vafes, 218 Ala. 609, 119 S 647. (2) Improper treatment of fractured leg and subsequent condition of leg. Schillinger v. Savage, 186 Ind. 189, 115 NE 321. (3) Improper treatment of severed tendon and loss of use of finger and permanent crippling of hand. Dunn v. Dufficy, 194 Cal. 383, 228 P 1029.

[b] Causal connection insufficiently alleged.—(1) Failure to test susceptibility of patient to injurious effects of X-ray treatments and injuries resulting from X-ray treatments administered. Hunter v. Burroughs, 123 Va. 113, 96 SE 360. (2) Lack of skill and negligence in diagnosis and treatment of back and subsequent ill health, weakness, and nervousness. Merriam v. Hamilton, 64 Or. 476, 130 P 406. (3) Lack of skill and negligence in diagnosis and treatment of gastritis, and the death of patient. Sweat v. Foster, 28 Ga. A. 360, 111 SE 66. Burroughs, 123 Va. 113, 96 SE 360. (2) A count alleging failure of defendant physician to make requisite preliminary examination before subjecting plaintiff to X-ray treatment is sufficient to raise the issue whether defendant was professionally unskillful and negligent so that it was not demurrable, because not alleging in detail what examination should have been made. Hunter v. Burroughs, supra. (3) A count charging that defendant physician was negligent in subjecting plaintiff to X-ray treatment without making preliminary examination to determine plaintiff's susceptibility was not demurrable, because it did not contain an express allegation that other specialists would not have been guilty of such omission. 6. Blackburn v. Curd, 106 SW 1186, 32 KyL 789.

[a] Availability of other physicians.—Where a petition for malpractice alleged facts showing an obligation on defendant to continue to treat deceased, and that he failed to comply therewith or render the necessary treatment, and by reason of such failure deceased received injuries and died, the petition was not objectionable for failure to allege that another physician could not have been obtained to treat deceased when defendant failed to do so. [§ 151] c. Issues, Proof, and Variance. As in other actions,[20] the issues in an action for injuries sustained as a result of a breach of duty on the part of a physician or surgeon are confined to those raised by the pleadings;[21] every allegation of the pleadings necessary to the establishment of the cause of action or defense must be proved if put in issue;[22] and the proof must be restricted to the issues made by the pleadings,[23] and must correspond substantially with what is alleged.[24] Immaterial allegations need not patient to prove that the operation was performed without her consent, or the consent of some one who could act for her, a plea alleging leave and license to perform the operation was unnecessary. Pratt v. Davis, 224 Ill. 300, 79 NE 562, 7 LRANS 609, 8 Ann Cas 197.

Snearly v. McCarthy, 180 Iowa 81, 161 NW 108. (3) Where a complaint in an action for malpractice alleged that by reason of defendant's negligence in the treatment of plaintiff's fractured limb it became necessary to amputate it, and that by reason of such negligence plaintiff suffered pain and anguish, this limited defendant's liability to neglect causing loss of the limb, and no recovery could be had for pain or anguish if such loss was not caused by his negligence. [a] Illustrations.—(1) In an action against a surgeon to recover damages for injuries alleged to have ensued from his want of ordinary care and skill in the treatment of a fracture, proof that he gave assurances to plaintiff that he possessed and would exercise extraordinary skill and effect a cure, is not admissible to support the declaration. Goodwin v. Hersom, 65 Me. 223. (2) The exclusion of evidence of defendant's statement that a patient was in an excellent condition to submit to an operation is proper where negligence was not charged in performing the operation when the patient was not in a proper physical condition. Ruble v. Busby, 27 Ida. 486, 149 P 722, AnnCas1917D 665. (3) Where the declaration in an action against a physician for malpractice does not allege general incompetency in defendant, plaintiff cannot recover on that ground, but must show that defendant did not properly exercise the skill which he in fact possessed. Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32, 29 NW 832. (4) Where plaintiff failed to allege negligence in not giving proper constitutional treatment to aid the bones to form the union, evidence as to such proposition was properly excluded. Snearly v. McCarthy, 180 Iowa 81, 161 NW 108. (5) On a complaint for malpractice, charging negligence and want of skill in treating a fractured limb, by reason of which it had to be amputated, evidence of the manner in which such amputation was performed is not competent, no lack of care or skill in that respect being charged. Jacobs v. Cross, 19 Minn. 523. (6) Evidence that a physician used a brass pin in opening a blister, caused by the use of a hot water bottle, is inadmissible, where the only negligence charged is in negligently placing hot water bottles on patient. Peters v. Howard, 206 Ill. A. 610. (7) Where the petition, in an action against a physician for malpractice in treating a fracture of an arm, presented a case of a permanent injury and demanded damages on that theory, evidence as to the reasonable value of the services of a surgeon in performing an operation to reset the fracture was inadmissible as outside of the issues. Albertson v. Lewis, 132 Iowa 243, 109 NW 705. (8) In an action for malpractice, plaintiff cannot give evidence that the physician abandoned the patient, and refused to prescribe, unless it is so laid in the declaration. Bemus v. Howard, 3 Watts (Pa.) 255. (9) Where, in an action against a surgeon for alleged malpractice, the petition alleged unskillfulness in the treatment of the broken limb, and the answer traversed such allegation, without averring any hereditary peculiarity as a special defense, evidence as to the weakness of the bones of plaintiff's family was inadmissible. West v. Martin, 31 Mo. 375, 80 AmD 107.

[b] Proof within averments.—(1) Abandonment of patient under declaration alleging that the injury resulted from the careless, negligent, improper, and unskillful treatment of the physician. Lawson v. Conaway, 37 W. Va. 159, 16 SE 564, 38 AmSR 17, 18 LRA 627. (2) Availability of X-ray machines to defendants under a petition charging physicians with negligence in failing to discover that a nerve was caught between fragments of broken bone. Ingwersen v. Carr, 180 Iowa 988, 164 NW 217. (3) Bandaging a fractured arm too tightly at the time of the first treatment, under a petition charging carelessness and lack of skill in failing to make proper allowance for the swelling inevitably attendant upon fractured limbs, as well as leaving the bandage too tight thereafter. Phifer v. Baker, 34 Wyo. 415, 244 P 637. (4) Emergency requiring an operation in addition to that specifically authorized under a denial of allegations charging an unauthorized operation. King v. Carney, 85 Okl. 62, 204 P 270. (5) Failure to attend a patient subsequent to the date of her miscarriage, under an allegation charging the physician with failure to use the necessary skill and care in attending upon and treating her for that ailment. Kruger v. Bossingham, 152 Minn. 243, 188 NW 324. (6) Improper selection of point of amputation under an allegation that the amputation was unskillfully and negligently performed. Wright v. Hardy, 22 Wis. 348. (7) Lack of a filter on an X-ray machine, under a petition alleging negligence in unduly exposing plaintiff to the ray. Gross v. Robinson, 203 Mo. A. 118, 218 SW 924. (8) Payment of a certain sum for an operation may be proved under a petition which alleges the contract of employment by way of inducement and then proceeds as for an action in tort. Reeves v. Lutz, 179 Mo. A. 61, 162 SW 280. (9) Placing patient's arm in a straight splint and subsequently in a splint slightly curved instead of placing it in a position at about right angles as required by proper surgical practice, under an allegation that defendant negligently and unskillfully failed to place the arm in splints in such position as to avoid overlapping of the fractured bones. Brooks v. Brookes, (Mo. A.) 186 SW 1105. (10) Propriety of operation, under a plea denying allegations of petition charging that the operation performed was not the operation contracted for and averring that the operation performed was done in a skillful, careful, and proper manner. Perry v. Hodgson, 37 Ga. A. 314, 140 SE 396. (11) Use of unsterilized glass, unsterilized spoon, and unsterilized water by a dentist, under an allegation that in making a hypodermic injection after extraction of teeth a solution was used which was highly septic and contaminated with germs and bacteria. Dimock v. Miller, 202 Cal. 668, 262 P 311.

be proved.[25] In accord with, and subject to, the rules governing in actions founded upon negligence generally,[26] plaintiff is not confined in his evidence to any particular acts or omissions where negligence of the physician or surgeon is alleged in general terms.[27] But where specific acts of negligence are alleged, the proof must be confined to the specific acts charged.[28] This rule, however, does not exclude proof of incidental facts and circumstances which fairly tend to establish the negligence of the primary act charged.[29] Where a plaintiff has alleged two or more acts of negligence, it is sufficient for him to prove one of them.[30]

Under a general denial, in an action against a physician or surgeon for breach of contract to perform professional services, defendant may show that he did not make the contract claimed by plaintiff,[31] and also what the contract actually was.[32]

[§ 152] 6. Evidence[33]—a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof—(1) Presumptions. The general rules relating to presumptions,[34] particularly those which apply in actions founded upon negligence,[35] ordinarily govern and control in actions for malpractice.[36] Negligence on the part of a physician or surgeon is not presumed, but must be affirmatively proved.[37] The same is true ordinarily with respect to the possession by the physician or surgeon of the requisite skill and learning.[38] On the contrary, in the absence of evidence on the subject, it will be presumed that a physician or surgeon discharged his full duty to the patient,[39] including the exercise of reasonable care and skill in his treatment.[40] Save in those exceptional cases governed by the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur,[41] no inference of negligence or want of skill can be drawn from the result of treatment by a physician or surgeon.[42] Thus no presumption of negligence or want of skill arises from the mere fact that the treatment given was unsuccessful,[43] or failed to produce the best results.[44] Nor does any such presumption arise from the mere fact that, while under the care of the physician or surgeon, the patient dies,[45] or sustains an injury.[46] This is so, even though the injury sustained is of an unusual character.[47]

Under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur,[48] it has been held that an inference of negligence may be permitted in the absence of explanation by the physician or surgeon where the thing which caused the injury complained of was under his management or control and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if proper care is exercised.[49] The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable where the injury is one which may occur, even though proper care is exercised.[50] And there is some authority to the effect that the doctrine has no application to actions against physicians or surgeons for malpractice.[51] It has been held that, in an action for damages sustained by reason of acts or omissions constituting malpractice, no inference of incompetence on the part of defendant can be drawn from the fact that he was not duly licensed to act as a physician or surgeon.[52] It is sometimes provided by statute, however, that in such actions the fact that defendant acted as a physician or surgeon without being duly licensed shall, when the acts complained of were a proximate cause of the injuries, be deemed prima facie evidence of negligence.[53]

Consent to operation. In the absence of evidence showing that the patient was the victim of false representations his consent to an operation will be presumed from the fact that he voluntarily submitted to it.[54]

Malicious intent. If a physician apply a treatment not sanctioned by medical science which resulted in injury and which such physician was bound to know would result in injury, the law imputes a malicious intent.[55]

[§ 153] (2) Burden of Proof. The rules relating to burden of proof in civil actions generally,[56] particularly those governing actions for negligence,[57] are applicable in an action against a physician or surgeon for malpractice.[58] Plaintiff has the burden of establishing the breach of duty on the part of the physician or surgeon[59] and the causal connection between the breach of duty and the injury complained of.[60] As in civil actions generally,[61] where plaintiff introduces evidence sufficient to make out a prima facie case, it is then incumbent upon the adverse party, in order to prevent a recovery, to introduce evidence sufficient to overcome or rebut such showing.[62] But the rule that the burden of establishing a breach of duty on the part of the physician or surgeon and causal relation between the breach and the injury complained of is not affected by the fact that the duty of going forward with the testimony to overcome a prima facie case made during the trial is upon the adverse party.[63] Thus the burden of proving negligence on the part of the physician or surgeon is not affected by the fact that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable to the facts of the case.[64]

Affirmative defenses. In accord with, and subject to, general rules[65] defendant has the burden of proving affirmative defenses.[66]

Contributory negligence. The general rules as to the burden of proving contributory negligence in negligence cases[67] are applicable in actions against physicians or surgeons for malpractice.[68]

[§ 154] b. Admissibility.—(1) In General. The rules governing the admissibility of evidence in civil actions generally[69] apply in an action to recover damages for malpractice.[70] In accord with, and subject to, such rules any competent evidence is admissible which tends to prove or disprove the existence at the time and place in question of the relation of physician or surgeon and patient,[71] the responsibility of defendant for the acts or omissions complained of,[72] the nature and extent of the in-

W. Va.—Browning v. Hoffman, 90 W. Va. 568, 111 SE 492.

[a] Rule applied.—(1) Absence of circumstances preventing physician from immediately washing away bichloride of mercury used in treatment of child's head or rendering such course inadvisable, to show negligence on his part in sending her home with instructions to do so herself upon arrival. Twombly v. Piette, 99 Vt. 499, 134 A 700. (2) Competency of assistant left in charge during defendant's temporary absence, to show freedom from negligence in providing for patient's care and for emergencies during time defendant was absent. Browning v. Hoffman, 90 W. Va. 568, 111 SE 492. (3) Knowledge of defendant that a druggist held himself out and advertised himself as a manufacturing chemist, to show freedom from negligence in using a solution compounded by him on defendant's order. Ball v. Skinner, 134 Iowa 298, 111 NW 1022. (4) Premature discharge from hospital. Torrance v. Wells, (Ala.) 122 S 322. (5) Rule excluding operations by surgeons not connected with private hospital maintained by defendant, to show negligence in not sooner performing an operation which might have been performed promptly by a surgeon not connected with the hospital. Browning v. Hoffman, supra. (6) Specialization by defendant in treatment of diseases of the eye and nose, to show his lack of qualifications for the treatment of a fractured patella and tibia. Klodek v. May Creek Logging Co., 71 Wash. 573, 129 P 99.

[b] Custom of assistants to account for sponges used while performing an operation is admissible to show freedom from negligence in leaving a sponge in the wound. Barnett v. Brand, 165 Ky. 616, 177 SW 461; Rayburn v. Day, 126 Or. 135, 268 P 1002.

[c] Custom of physicians (1) to report suspected smallpox cases is admissible to disprove negligence in confining plaintiff with other persons afflicted with the disease. McGuire v. Amyx, 317 Mo. 1061, 297 SW 968, 54 ALR 644. (2) Custom of defendant as to the calling of an assistant during his absence is admissible to show freedom from negligence in temporarily leaving a patient. Browning v. Hoffman, 90 W. Va. 568, 111 SE 492.

[d] Devotion of time to other pursuits principally is admissible to show lack of skill and knowledge on the part of the physician or surgeon whose treatment is complained of Hess v. Lowrey, 122 Ind. 225, 23 NE 156, 17 AmSR 355, 7 LRA 90.

[e] Difficulty of dressing postoperative wound is admissible to show negligence of the operating physician in leaving the work of dressing the wound to the hospital staff. Hunner v. Stevenson, 122 Md. 40, 89 A 418.

[f] Propriety of taking X-ray photographs is admissible to show negligence in failing properly to set a fractured leg. Viita v. Dolan, 132 Minn. 128, 155 NW 1077, LRA1916D 644, AnnCas1917E 678.

[g] Time usually required for wound to heal is admissible to show negligence on the part of the operating surgeon in leaving all postoperative dressings to be applied by the hospital staff. Hunner v. Stevenson, 122 Md. 40, 89 A 418.

Wash.—Hoffman v. Watkins, 89 Wash. 661, 155 P 159.

[a] Illustrations.—(1) Where plaintiff claims defendant was negligent in the application to plaintiff's ankle of a solution, whereby it was burned, and also in failing to discover the difficulty and remove the bandage when he was first called thereafter, and the evidence authorized a finding that he was not negligent in the first instance but was on the subsequent visit, it was error to refuse to allow him, testifying as an expert, to answer the question whether, assuming the solution was as caustic as shown by its effect on plaintiff's ankle, the caustic had expended its force and done its damage by the time of the first visit subsequent to its application. Ball v. Skinner, 134 Iowa 298, 111 NW 1022. (2) In an action against an operating surgeon for damages caused by the hospital attendants in negligently leaving gauze in the wound after dressing it, causing pulmonary tuberculosis, a physician was properly asked what connection the tubercular condition of the sinus had with the operation and subsequent treatment. Hunner v. Stevenson, 122 Md. 40, 89 A 418. (3) In an action for negligently performing a surgical operation on plaintiff's eye, alleged to have caused a loss of plaintiff's sight, evidence that the disease from which plaintiff was suffering generally resulted in a loss of sight is competent. Peck v. Hutchinson, 88 Iowa 320, 55 NW 511. (4) In an action for malpractice in the treatment of plaintiff's wrists, a witness was properly permitted to testify that after plaintiff's wrists had been examined by medical experts, and she had returned from the courthouse, her wrists were disfigured and swollen, and that she complained of the pain in them, plaintiff having claimed that by reason of defendant's treatment her wrists still caused her pain, and the fact that experts had recently manipulated them not being withheld from the jury. Willard v. Norcross, 81 Vt. 293, 69 A 942. (5) In an action against a chiropractor for malpractice, resulting in the death of a child, plaintiff was entitled to show the existence of a customary well-known form of treatment used successfully by physicians professing to treat infectious and communicable human ailments, and probability that proper treatment by such person would have afforded relief and saved the child's life as bearing on the result of defendant's neglect to use reasonable care and skill to ascertain whether the child was afflicted with such disease. Janssen v. Mulder, 232 Mich. 183, 205 NW 159. (6) In an action for malpractice in the treatment of plaintiff's shoulder, alleged to have been dislocated, evidence of dislocation existing twenty-one days after treatment by defendant is competent to show a dislocation at the time of treatment. Hoffman v. Watkins, 89 Wash. 661, 155 P 159. (7) Evidence showing the course of treatment by an associated physician during defendant's absence is admissible to show that the treatment approved by defendant was continued without change for the purpose of rebutting the claim that any efficient cause intervened by reason of anything the associated physician did on his own initiative to bring about the condition of plaintiff. Stokes v. Long, 52 Mont. 470, 159 P 28. (8) In an action against a surgeon for malpractice, a physician's evidence that he examined plaintiff's limb five years after the injury, and that it then indicated that the neck of the femur had been fractured, was admissible to corroborate plaintiff's testimony that its condition immediately after the injury was such as would be caused by a fracture. Bonnet v. Foote, 47 Colo. 282, 107 P 252, 28 LRANS 136.

Wis.—Paro v. Carter, 178 Wis. 121, 188 NW 68; Wright v. Hardy, 22 Wis. 348.

[a] Rule applied.—(1) Where negligence in the treatment actually given is relied upon, evidence that defendant stated to a physician subsequently called that he had not been discharged from the case and had not received payment for his services is inadmissible. Short v. Frink, 151 Cal. 83, 90 P 200. (2) Where the injury, if any, arose out of improper treatment of septicemia, and not out of defendant's incorrect diagnosis of the ailment as osteomyelitis, evidence as to what the result of the treatment would have been if it had been continued and what is the correct treatment for osteomyelitis is inadmissible. Osborn v. Cary, 28 Ida. 89, 152 P 473. (3) Evidence that ordinary practice would suggest the taking of the patient to a hospital is inadmissible where failure to take the patient to a hospital was not charged and there was no evidence that he had received improper treatment at home. Cozine v. Moore, 159 Iowa 472, 141 NW 424. (4) Where, in an action for malpractice, based on the improper treatment of a Potts fracture, necessitating amputation of a leg, the evidence showed that portions of the bones tient at the time in question,[87] and the acts or omissions of defendant in connection with the treatment of the patient.[88] The treatment received by the patient after defendant gave up the case may be shown.[89] The mere fact that evidence is not of itself sufficient to establish improper treatment does not render it inadmissible.[90] Where negligent treatment is charged, testimony of the physician or surgeon that he exercised his best judgment is admissible.[91] Defendant may also state what, from his study and experience, he deems proper treatment of the case in question.[92] Evidence that he employed another skillful physician to assist him is competent,[93] but not to prove either skill or diligence on his part.[94]

The result of the treatment is also admissible,[95] although no inference of improper treatment can be drawn from the result alone.[96]

Treatment in other cases. The usual, ordinary, and customary treatment of similar cases may be shown.[97] But evidence that a better result is ordinarily obtained is not admissible,[98] although evidence is admissible which tends to prove that the result complained of does not occur where the requisite skill and care is exercised.[99] Nor is evidence admissible to show that another would have treated the patient in some other way,[1] or to show how defendant's treatment of like cases differed from that of other physicians.[2] Nor can freedom from negligence in adopting the treatment complained of be shown by evidence, that the treatment was the same as that used by another physician or surgeon in another case,[3] or by evidence that defendant used the same treatment in other cases with good results.[4] But where negligence in furnishing an appliance which occasioned the injury is charged, were removed before amputation, and that the condition of the bones before and at amputation indicated a continuing disintegration from some cause long active after defendant ceased to treat the injury, the bones of the amputated limb could not be received as an exhibit. Farrell v. Haze, 157 Mich. 374, 122 NW 197. (5) The only issue in the case being whether defendant at an operation on plaintiff left gauze in her abdomen, testimony as to the proper mode of drainage subsequent to the operation is inadmissible. Paro v. Carter, 178 Wis. 121, 188 NW 68. (6) There being no claim of negligence after amputation of a leg, evidence as to matters thereafter occurring is properly excluded. Barfield v. South Highlands Infirmary, 191 Ala. 553, 68 S 30, Ann Cas1916C 1097. (7) In a suit against a veterinary surgeon for negligent vaccination of hogs, evidence of what was done in vaccination of eight hogs delivered to plaintiff after vaccination of plaintiff's herd by defendant was properly refused. Phillips v. Leuth, 200 Iowa 272, 204 NW 301. (8) It is error to admit evidence of a method of treatment, long antedating that involved and differing materially from the method adopted in the treatment and generally approved and used at the time thereof. Browning v. Hoffman, 86 W. Va. 468, 103 SE 484.

[b] A custom of the locality or a particular hospital with respect to the care of patients after a surgical operation, the dressing of the wound, etc., cannot be shown to affect the right of a patient to recover for malpractice, where he was a stranger to the locality, and is not shown to have had knowledge or notice of the custom. Harris v. Fall, 177 Fed. 79, 100 CCA 497, 27 LRANS 1174.

Peterson v. Phelps, 123 Minn. 319, 143 NW 793, AnnCas1915A 257. (2) In an action for negligence in a surgical operation, defendant, upon a showing that it was the usual and proper practice in hospital cases to leave the care of the patient after an operation to the hospital staff, may testify in answer to a question as to what instructions he gave to the members of the hospital staff, and the exclusion of such testimony is reversible error. [a] Rule applied.—(1) Where plaintiff's expert testified that one recognized method of treatment was known as the open method, excluding evidence that the open method was not the usual method of practice was error. Lemon v. Kessel, 202 Iowa 273, 209 NW 393. (2) On an issue of negligence of a physician in administering an anæsthetic, it being shown dentists use it more often than physicians, and are often more skilled in its use, evidence of the usual and customary methods of dentists, skilled in that respect, in using it, is admissible. Spain v. Burch, 169 Mo. A. 94, 154 SW 172. (3) In an action for the death of a patient claimed to have been due to the removal of healthy tissue under the suspicion that it was a malignant growth, exclusion of the question as to whether a reasonably prudent surgeon would not have had a prompt analysis made if in doubt as to the nature of the tissue is error. Coleman v. Wilson, 85 N. J. L. 203, 88 A 1059, Ann Cas1915D 1122. (4) In an action against a surgeon for injuries caused by negligently leaving foreign matter in plaintiff's body when her wound was dressed by hospital attendants, a question to a physician whether it was the invariable custom among competent surgeons personally to apply all dressings following the operation where the patients are treated in hospitals was proper. Hunner v. Stevenson, 122 Md. 40, 89 A 418.

[a] Rule applied.—In an action for malpractice in treating a broken leg which became three inches shorter, excluding testimony that shortening of one or two inches would be the ordinary result was not error. Lemon v. Kessel, 202 Iowa 273, 209 NW 393.

99. Evans v. Clapp, (Mo. A.) 231 SW 79.

[a] X-ray burns.—Where plaintiff, as the result of defendant's X-ray examinations, was severely burned, the fact that such examinations, when carefully and properly made, do not produce burns, might be considered as showing that the degree of care and skill ordinarily exercised by persons of the medical profession using such agencies was not exercised by defendant. [a] Thus, in an action for malpractice in treating a fractured leg, evidence of defendant that during his thirty-three years of experience prior to the case in question his treatment of fractures had been the same as in plaintiff's case, and the results had been good, was properly refused. Sheldon v. Wright, 80 Vt. 298, 67 A 807.

evidence that others had used the appliance in question with good results is admissible to show that defendant had no knowledge that it was unfit for the use intended.[5] Evidence of the conduct of the physician or surgeon in connection with the treatment of other cases is not admissible to prove or disprove that the requisite skill or care was exercised on the occasion in question.[6]

Reputation and professional character. In accord with general rules,[7] where an action for malpractice is founded upon negligence and the skill of the physician or surgeon is not in issue, proof of his general reputation for care is not admissible.[8] Nor is proof of his general reputation for skill admissible in such cases.[9] It has been held that proof of the general reputation of a physician or surgeon for skill is inadmissible, even though he is charged with unskillful treatment;[10] but there is some authority to the contrary.[11] There is also some authority to the effect that the general reputation of a physician or surgeon for both skill and care is admissible where both negligence and want of skill are charged.[12] The reputation of the institution where defendant received his professional training is not admissible on the issue of whether he possessed the requisite skill.[13] So, also, evidence that defendant procured his certificate of proficiency from the state board of examiners without examination, by means of diplomas irregularly obtained from medical schools, is irrelevant, as are also defendant's statements concerning such diplomas.[14] But evidence that defendant was not a regularly trained physician or surgeon is admissible for the purpose of rebutting evidence introduced by him to support his general professional character.[15]

[§ 156] (3) To Show Willful, Wanton, or Intentional Injury. Evidence of the reputation of defendant for care is inadmissible on the issue of willful injury.[16] The same is true of manifestations of ill will on the part of the physician or surgeon, which are so remote from the time of the treatment in question as to have no tendency to prove that the treatment rendered was intentionally improper.[17] For the purpose of negativing willful injury evidence that defendant administered the same treatment to others suffering a like affliction and with helpful results is admissible.[18]

[§ 157] c. Weight and Sufficiency. As in other civil actions,[19] every fact necessary to constitute a cause of action or defense in an action for malpractice must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.[20] Thus, where such facts are in issue, the party having the burden of proof thereof must establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the relation of physician or surgeon and patient existed at the time and place in question;[21] that the physician or surgeon failed to exercise proper skill or care in the treatment of the patient;[22] that man can have no knowledge whether the proper treatment was given.[38] Expert evidence is not required, however, where the results of the treatment are of such character as to warrant the inference of want of care from the testimony of laymen or in the light of the knowledge and experience of the jurors themselves.[39] That some facts tending to establish plaintiff's case may have been shown by nonexpert testimony is not objectionable.[40] It is not necessary, to sustain a verdict for plaintiff, that all the expert witnesses called should consider the treatment pursued by defendant improper,[41] nor will the fact that all such witnesses agree that a portion of the treatment is proper under some circumstances defeat a recovery.[42] Nor is it necessary to sustain a recovery that expert testimony showing improper treatment be specific and positive.[43] In determining the relative value of the evidence of medical experts in an action for surgical malpractice, the jury are to consider their professional knowledge and experience, freedom from bias, and the reasons they are able to give for their conclusions.[44]

[§ 158] 7. Questions of Law and Fact. General rules[45] govern in determining what are questions of law and fact in an action founded upon malpractice.[46] It is the duty of the court to determine whether any facts have been established from which malpractice may be reasonably inferred.[47] It is the province of the jury to determine whether from these facts malpractice ought to be inferred.[48] Thus, if the evidence with respect thereto is conflicting, or is such that different inferences may properly be drawn therefrom, it is for the jury to determine whether the relation of physician or surgeon and patient existed at the time and place in question;[49] whether a particular result was warranted;[50] whether an operation was performed without the consent of the patient,[51] or whether consent was to be implied from the circumstances;[52] whether proper skill or care was exercised in the treatment of the patient;[53] whether the breach of duty relied upon was a proximate cause of the injuries complained of;[54] whether defendant was responsible for the acts or omissions of others in connection with the treatment of the patient;[55] or whether plaintiff or one for whose conduct plaintiff is responsible was guilty of contributory negligence.[56] The same is true with respect to the nature and extent of the injuries sustained or damages suffered.[57] But, on the other hand, if the evidence presents no conflict on the question and is such as to furnish the basis for but a single inference, it is for the court to determine whether proper skill or care was exercised in the treatment of a patient.[58] The same is true with respect to questions of proximate cause,[59] responsibility of defendant for the acts or omissions of others,[60] and contributory negligence.[61] If the treatment is in accordance with a recognized system of surgery, it is not for the court or jury to undertake to determine whether that system is the best, nor to decide questions of surgical science on which surgeons differ among themselves.[62] It has been asserted that what constitutes ordinary skill, care, and diligence on the part of a physician and surgeon is a question of law, in this view at least, that it must be stated by the court as defined by the books;[63] but that, when considered in connection with the facts which it is necessary for the jury to understand in order to be able to apply it to a particular case, it becomes a mixed question of law and fact.[64]

[§ 159] 8. Instructions. The rules governing instructions in civil actions generally[65] are applicable to an action for damages founded upon malpractice.[66] It is the duty of the trial court to instruct the jury with respect to the law governing the case, explaining the precise questions at issue, and directing attention to the material evidence on both sides.[67] Where such facts are in issue, the jury should be correctly instructed as to the necessity of the existence at the time and place in question of the relation of physician or surgeon and patient;[68] the degree of skill or care to be exercised in the treatment of a patient;[69] the duty of the physician or surgeon with respect to obtaining the consent of the patient before performing an operation;[70] or with respect to giving notice of the contagious character of the disease of the patient;[71] the right of a physician or surgeon to substitute another to treat a patient without the latter's consent;[72] the necessity that the breach of duty relied upon be a proximate cause of the injuries complained of;[73] the responsibility of the physician or surgeon for the acts or omissions of others;[74] the care required of plaintiff, and the effect of his contributory negligence;[75]

[c] Departure from approved methods.—An instruction that "a departure from approved methods in general use, if it injures the patient, will render him (the physician) liable, however good his intentions may have been," is not improper, notwithstanding the rule may render a physician liable in case he adopts new methods, although improved ones. Allen v. Voje, 114 Wis. 1, 89 NW 924.

[d] Synonymous terms.—(1) There is no substantial difference in the use of the words "ordinary" and "reasonable" in defining the care and skill required of a surgeon or physician in his employment. Kendall v. Brown, 74 Ill. 232. (2) The words "fair" and "reasonable" are synonymous. Jones v. Angell, 95 Ind. 376. (3) An instruction that defendant was bound to use the ordinary degree of care and skill of the "profession" in his community is not objectionable because the word "profession" is used instead of the more accurate term "physician in good standing." and the damages recoverable.[76] Various general rules applied include those with respect to instructing the jury on the burden of proof,[77] and the inferences to be drawn from the evidence.[78] Other general rules applied include those requiring instructions to be specific,[79] applicable to the issues raised by the pleadings and the evidence,[80] and in such form and language as not to be confusing or misleading,[81] indefinite or uncertain,[82] inconsistent, conflicting, or contradictory,[83] as well as those requiring that instructions should not ignore the evidence in the case[84] or assume the existence or nonexistence of material controverted facts.[85] As in civil actions generally,[86] it is not necessary that ordinary words, used in their usual or conventional sense, be defined.[87] Instructions that peculiar weight is to be given expert medical testimony in determining whether proper treatment was administered are proper.[88] The same is true of instructions that the jury are not to set up a standard of their own, but must be guided by medical testimony.[89]

[§ 160] 9. Damages—a. In General. General rules[90] govern the recovery of damages in an action for malpractice.[91] In accord with, and subject to, such rules one who is injured by the malpractice of a physician or surgeon is entitled to compensation for all pecuniary losses which he has sustained as a direct and natural result thereof.[92] Particular elements of compensation may include loss of time,[93] impairment of earning capacity,[94] expenses actually incurred,[95] bodily pain and mental suffering[96] and the condition or circumstances of the injured party.[97] No recovery can be had for losses which do not result naturally and directly from the breach of duty proved.[98] A physician or surgeon is liable only for the loss caused by his malpractice, and not for that caused by the patient's original illness or injury,[99] or aggravation thereof caused by others than defendant.[1] Where it is impossible to distinguish between the consequences of the trouble for which a physician was called and the consequences of the maltreatment, only nominal damages can be given.[2] Recovery may be had for prospective damages which are reasonably certain to occur, as well as accrued damages.[3] In accord with the general rule[4] the duty to reduce damages does not require a person injured by malpractice to submit to a serious operation to effect a cure.[5] The person injured need only exercise his best judgment as a reasonable person.[6] In any event recovery will be prevented only to the extent the loss sustained was enhanced.[7]

[a] Instruction held sufficiently definite.—The phrase "physicians practicing," in a requested instruction in a malpractice case that, if defendants possessed such skill as is ordinarily possessed by "physicians practicing" in the same line in similar localities, and that in treating plaintiff's case they used ordinary care in exercising such skill, the verdict must be for them, means only such physicians as are ordinarily recognized as reputable physicians, and the refusal to give it cannot be justified on the ground that the phrase is too indefinite, and may include quacks. McBride v. Huckins, 76 N. H. 206, 81 A 528.

[b] Instruction held erroneous as uncertain.—In an action for performing an operation unskillfully and without plaintiff's consent, an instruction permitting her to recover such a sum as would fairly compensate her for loss of health, was held erroneous as too uncertain. Van Meter v. Crews, 149 Ky. 335, 148 SW 40.

The amount of damages. The jury ordinarily are the proper judges of the amount of damages to be allowed,[8] and their award will not be interfered with unless there is something in the case to show that the jury in their determination of the amount acted against the rules of law or suffered passion, prejudice, or other improper motive to mislead them.[9]

[§ 161] b. Nominal Damages.[10] Where a physician or surgeon is responsible for a breach of duty which obviously resulted in substantial injury, a verdict for merely nominal damages will not be allowed to stand.[11] Acceleration of the death of a patient is more than a mere technical injury, and demands an award of more than nominal damages.[12] Nor is recovery properly limited to nominal damages where an unauthorized operation causing some pain is proved.[13]

[§ 162] c. Exemplary or Punitive Damages.[14] While it has been held that exemplary damages for malpractice can be recovered only where the evidence shows an evil motive in the act complained of,[15] the weight of authority is to the effect that such damages may also be recovered where a physician has been guilty of gross negligence amounting to reckless indifference in treating a patient.[16] In the absence of evidence of malice, recklessness, or oppression, exemplary damages cannot be recovered.[17] One who is responsible for the negligent treatment of a patient by his associate is not liable for punitive damages where he was not present at the time in question and did not authorize or subsequently approve the treatment given.[18]

[§ 163] 10. Verdict and Findings. General rules[19] apply to the verdict and findings in an action to recover damages for malpractice.[20] To control a general verdict special findings in an action founded upon malpractice must be upon a substantial material issue,[21] and must be so inconsistent with, and antagonistic to, the general verdict as to be irreconcilable with it.[22]

[§ 164] 11. New Trial. General rules[23] are applicable to questions relating to a new trial of an action for malpractice.[24] Thus, where the verdict in a malpractice case is manifestly against the great preponderance of the evidence, it is an abuse of discretion not to grant a new trial.[25] And a new trial on account of excessive damages for malpractice will only be granted where they are so excessive as to indicate that the jury acted from prejudice, partiality, or corruption, or were misled as to the proper measure of damages.[26]

[§ 165] 12. Review. General rules[27] govern the review of actions to recover damages for malpractice.[28] Various general rules applied include those requiring a reviewing court to disregard any error which does not affect the subtantial rights of the party complaining,[29] to leave a verdict undisturbed where the evidence is conflicting,[30] and to set aside a verdict where it is unsupported by any evidence,[31] or where the evidence greatly preponderates against it,[32] or where errors affecting the substantial rights of the party complaining have occurred.[33] sage of the Medical Act,[35] a physician could not, as a general rule, except under an express contract for remuneration,[36] recover for his professional services in attending or prescribing for a patient;[37] he was presumed to act with a view only to an honorary reward;[38] but the rule was not applied to surgeons.[39] Since the passage of the act, a physician may also recover without an express contract.[40] In the United States, the rule prohibiting the recovery of compensation by a physician has never been in force, and a physician has uniformly been held to be entitled to recover for his services in the same manner as any other person who performs services for another.[41] The employment of a physician, surgeon, or dentist without express agreement as to compensation raises an implied agreement on the part of the party employing him to pay him the reasonable value of his services[42] within a reasonable time after they are rendered,[43] and at the physician's place of business.[44] It has been held that one receiving a physician's services is not released from liability to pay therefor by the fact that the physician has an agreement with a third person regarding payment, on which he relied in rendering the services.[45]

Services to unconscious or incapable person. Where a physician renders services to a person injured by an accident rendering him unconscious, or otherwise rendered incapable of making a request for, or expressing consent to, the services, the law will imply a promise from him who received the benefit of the services to pay for them.[46] The rule has been held not to apply to physician's services rendered to one accidentally injured, even if rendered unconscious, if immediate attention is not required,[47] particularly where there is free ambulance service and free hospital treatment is furnished by the municipality.[48] It has been held that there is no distinction as to the right of recovery between a case where the physician is called by a stranger or spectator and one where he proceeds to treat such a case without being asked to do so.[49]

[§ 167] 2. As Dependent on Right To Practice[50]—a. In General. In the absence of a statute requiring a license, or prohibiting the practice of medicine without it for a fee or reward, an unlicensed physician has been held entitled to recover for his services if he complies with other statutory requirements.[51] Statutes regulating the right to practice medicine have been enacted in all the states,[52] and various statutes regulating the admission to practice of physicians, surgeons, dentists, or other practitioners, have expressly provided that, where there has been a failure to comply with the statutory requisites for admission, no recovery can be had for services rendered in a professional capacity.[53] Even where the statute in force at a particular time contains no such provision, or without reference to such a provision, the courts will refuse a recovery for medical services rendered by one who has failed to comply with the statutory requirements as to obtaining a license and as to other qualifications for practice,[54] particularly where a penalty is imposed

"The physician . . . is entitled to enforce . . . [his legal rights to recover] regardless of what may be considered the ethics of the medical profession in such a case, with which the court is not concerned. Duty requiring him to give his aid, and having given it, he may expect payment by reason of the promise created by law from the patient to do so, although he never asked for the aid or consented to it being given. In an emergency case, requiring immediate attention to save life, the physician when called, or when he volunteers his services, should not stop to inquire by whom he will be paid, or to make it known that he expects to be paid. . . . While the question whether or not the services were intended to be gratuitous is one of fact, the plaintiff may rest his case upon an implied promise and can recover, unless it is shown either that there was no intention to charge or that the credit was extended to a third person. Offering his aid does not establish the fact that he intended his services to be gratuitous." Schoenberg v. Rose, supra.

"It is the general and uniform holding of the courts that one who publicly professes to cure or heal, or holds himself out as a physician, without a license to practice medicine as such, cannot recover compensation for his services rendered in such capacity." Lyon v. Leet, 199 Iowa 1034, 1035, 202 NW 881.

[a] Reasons for rule.—(1) "It is a settled principle that one cannot recover compensation for doing an act, to do which is forbidden by law, and is a misdemeanor." Fox v. Dixon, 12 NYS 267, 268. (2) "Where a stat-by statute for practicing without such compliance,[55] or where such practice is made a criminal offense.[56] Money paid to an unlicensed practitioner may be recovered,[57] at least so long as the agreement as to services remains executory.[58] A statute prohibiting practice as a nurse, or engaging in the care of the sick as an attendant, without a license, does not prevent a recovery for the rendering of services in the nature of nursing as incidental to general employment as a caretaker.[59]

[§ 168] b. Failure To Register or Record License. Where the statute further requires that the certificate of qualification be filed, registered, or recorded, together with other required information, in the office of a named public official,[60] a physician who has not complied with such requirement is not entitled to recover his fees,[61] it being so provided by some statutes,[62] unless such registration is not made a prerequisite to the right to practice.[63]

[§ 169] c. Excuse for Failure To Qualify. A physician has been held not prevented from recovering for attendance before he had registered, where his delay in registering was owing to the registry clerk's negligence;[64] but a failure to file a certificate has not been excused as being on account of a misapprehension as to the proper office in which to file, induced by the misunderstanding of the clerk of the district court.[65] So, also, a physician practicing without a license may maintain an action at law for his services, if, during the time of those services, there was no existing board of examiners.[66] But the illness of a physician, preventing him from attending the meeting of the licensing board, is no excuse for his failure to obtain a license.[67]

[§ 170] d. Compliance at Time of Rendition of Services. A physician cannot recover for services rendered before the issuance of his certificate by the board, although he made application therefor before his employment began,[68] and although he had been orally informed that he would receive a license.[69] Nor is compliance with the terms of the statute after the rendition of the services, but before the bringing of the action for compensation, sufficient to entitle a physician to recover.[70] But it has been held that an unregistered surgeon may recover for services rendered prior to the passage of a statute requiring registration.[71]

[§ 171] e. Place of Residence or of Performance of Services. Since the provisions of a statute regulating the practice of medicine and surgery apply to practitioners living without the state, as well as to those within it, no physician or surgeon, although he may live without the state, will be entitled to recover in the state courts fees for services rendered within it, unless previously licensed in the manner prescribed.[72] But a statute prohibiting a recovery for medical services rendered by an unlicensed physician does not prevent a recovery in that state for

[d] Certificate of good character.—One who is not allowed by law to collect his dues for medical or surgical services as a regular practitioner cannot recover compensation therefor, unless, prior to their performance, he obtained a certificate of good moral character, in the manner prescribed by St. (1838) c 353, § 2. Thompson v. Hazen, 25 Me. 104.

[e] Unlicensed christian scientist.—Assumpsit lies on an express promise to pay for services rendered by one practicing the healing art according to the methods of those calling themselves "Christian Scientists," plaintiff having complied with Rev. St. c 13 § 9, requiring persons not licensed by medical associations to obtain a certificate of good moral character from the officers of the town where they then reside. Wheeler v. Sawyer, (Me.) 15 A 67.

[f] A note given in consideration of services rendered (1) by the payee as a physician, when he has not obtained a license, is void (Mays v. Williams, 27 Ala. 267; Holland v. Adams, 21 Ala. 680; Coyle v. Campbell, 10 Ga. 570; State Bank v. Lawrence, 177 Ind. 515, 96 NE 947, 42 LRANS 326; Lyon v. services rendered in another;[73] and a physician licensed in the state where the contract for medical services was made does not lose his right to recover thereunder in that state by the fact that he gave the patient medical attention in another state in which he was not licensed and in which he was temporarily residing.[74] It has been held that, where all the parties to a suit for compensation for medical services are residents of the state in which the action was brought, and the contract was made in that state, recovery may be had regardless of the statute of the foreign state in which the services were rendered, regulating the right to practice there.[75] A physician who fails to comply with a statute providing that a physician licensed in one county cannot practice in another county without first obtaining a new license there cannot recover for services rendered in such other county,[76] except in the case of an emergency;[77] but the right to recover is not to be extended beyond the necessity of the actual emergency.[78]

[§ 172] f. Temporary License. Where, by statute, provision is made for the granting of a temporary license by the individual members of the board which authorizes the physician to practice until he can obtain a permanent license,[79] a physician practicing under such authority is entitled to recover compensation for his services;[80] but not a physician practicing under an unauthorized temporary certificate.[81]

[§ 173] g. Effect of Repeal or Amendment of Disqualifying Act. Where a disqualifying statute not only takes away all right of action for services performed by an unlicensed physician, but renders a contract to perform such services void in its inception, the repeal of such statute does not validate prior transactions, so as to enable the physician to recover compensation for services rendered by him before the passage of the repealing act.[82] The same rule applies where the disqualifying statute is amended so as to permit a certain excepted class of physicians to practice without a license.[83] Where, however, the disqualifying statute merely deprives an unlicensed physician of legal remedy for recovering compensation for his services, without preventing the accruement of a valid debt, then when such statute is repealed, which imposes this restraint upon the physician's remedy, he may maintain his action for services rendered prior to such repeal.[84]

[§ 174] h. Effect of Revival of Disqualifying Act. The revival of an act which invalidates the contracts of unlicensed physicians revives also the exception of the former act as to physicians practicing at the time of its enactment; and hence a physician practicing at the time of the revival may collect his fees, although not qualified thereunder.[85]

[§ 175] 3. As Dependent on Beneficial Result of Services. In the absence of an express agreement to the contrary,[86] the right of a physician or surgeon to be compensated for his services does not depend upon the measure of his success in effecting a cure by the means employed, but upon diligent exercise, under his employment, of the skill commonly exercised by those practicing his profession.[87]

[§ 176] 4. Under "No Cure No Pay" Contract. A contract between a patient and his physician that the latter's right to compensation shall be dependent upon his curing the patient is valid and binding,[88] even though no specified compensation is agreed upon.[89] If a physician commences to attend a patient, under a contract that if there is no cure there shall be no pay, he cannot recover for his services or medicines, unless he shows a performance of the terms of the contract on his part;[90] nor can he recover if he fails, as agreed, to effect a cure within a specified time.[91] Where the contract contains a condition that, if a cure is not at first effected, the patient shall submit to further treatment, the physician is entitled to the agreed compensation, even though a cure is not effected, if the patient refuses or neglects to submit to further treatment.[92]

Recurrence of same disease. When a cure has been fairly effected, the contract cannot be evaded by the fact that the patient subsequently and by his voluntary act suffers a recurrence of the same disease.[93]

[§ 177] 5. As Affected by Negligence or Want of Skill.[94] On the question whether a physician is entitled to compensation for his services when he has failed to exercise ordinary skill or has been negligent in the treatment of a case, most authorities hold that, if a physician fails in his duty to exercise ordinary and reasonable skill and care in treating a patient, he is guilty of a default in his undertaking and can recover nothing for his services,[95] while others hold that the fact that a physician was guilty of negligence in the treatment of his patient, resulting in damages to the latter, does not necessarily preclude him from recovering any compensation whatever for his services, and that he may recover the value of his services less the amount of damages suffered by reason of his negligence.[96] The reasonable value of the use of a room, board, and nurse hire have been held recoverable regardless of the question as to the exercise of ordinary care and skill by the physician.[97]

[§ 178] 6. As Dependent on Intention That Services Shall be Gratuitous.[98] While there is an implied agreement to pay for the services of a physician,[99] if the services were intended to be and were accepted as a gift or act of benevolence, they cannot at the election of the physician create a legal obligation to pay.[1] But their character is not controlled by the inexpressed and revocable intentions of plaintiff physician, although his purposes subsequently asserted may aid in ascertaining it.[2] And the fact that a physician is employed by reason of the friendship between members of his and the employer's families does not excuse the employer from paying the legal obligation incurred.[3] Where a physician renders services upon an understanding between the parties that he was to be remunerated by a legacy, this amounts to an agreement that he was to make no charge;[4] but if the services are performed under the mere expectation of a legacy, the physician is entitled, on being disappointed in his expectation, to recover compensation therefor.[5] It has been held that a physician who renders gratuitous services to the children of a widow cannot, after her death, change his mind and present a claim against her estate on a quantum meruit.[6]

Services to members of physician's family. It has been held that there is a recognized custom or practice among physicians not to charge one another for services rendered to members of their respective families,[7] and therefore that, if a doctor intends to charge the widow and children of a deceased physician for attendance, he must say so, thus giving the patient the opportunity of going to another doctor who will not charge.[8]

[§ 179] 7. As Dependent on Ability of Physician or Patient To Perform.[9] Where a patient pays a physician in advance for treatments to be received, but becomes too ill to attend the physician's office for the treatments, the physician, having incurred no preparatory expense prior to the patient's disafusal to accept the surgeon's advice that she go to another surgeon, he said that if she was willing to take a chance with him, he would take a chance with her. Harvey v. Richardson, 91 Wash. 245, 157 P 674, AnnCas 1918A 881.

[§ 180] 8. For Services of Physician's Assistants and Employees. It has been held that physicians and surgeons can recover for the services of their students in attendance on their patients,[14] and for the services of such assistants as they may require,[15] although not for the services of unqualified assistants.[16] But there is authority to the effect that a physician called in as assistant to another, who had no express authority from his employer to engage an assistant, cannot recover against the employer for his services.[17] A physician summoned by another to assist him, under an arrangement that the latter will be responsible, is entitled to recover from the summoning physician.[18]

[§ 181] 9. Fees of Consultants. A physician or surgeon summoned in consultation by another may recover of the patient compensation for his services,[19] notwithstanding an agreement between the patient and the attending physician that the latter would pay for such services,[20] unless the consulting physician expressly or impliedly assents to the agreement.[21] Where there is a difference between the charge for a consultation and that for a simple visit, the fact that more than one physician is called in and attends regularly upon the case does not make every visit of every physician a consultation.[22]

[§ 182] 10. For Medicine and Materials Furnished. A person who has failed to comply with statutory provisions regulating the right to practice medicine[23] cannot recover for medicines furnished by him;[24] and it is so provided in some statutes.[25] Yet if he sells drugs and medicines apart from his professional business as a physician, he may recover for them.[26] In England it has been held that one holding a certificate as a surgeon only cannot recover for medicines administered by him unless the administering of the medicines was subservient and subordinate to the discharge of his duty as a surgeon.[27] An unregistered dentist, despite a statute preventing an unregistered person from recovering any fee or charge for dental operations or dental attendance or advice, may recover for a dental bridge[28] or for false teeth[29] made and supplied,

[a] Reason for rule.—"The defendant impliedly directed the family physician to act in such a way, and to adopt such a course of treatment as in his judgment would be most likely to effect the ultimate recovery of the patient's health; and the selection of the consultant with the knowledge of the patient and . . . [her] husband, was clearly within the scope of the authority given to the physician. To this knowledge was added the defendant's consent in regard to the employment of the plaintiff, and conceding that the services were not rendered at his special instance and request at the time of the performance, nevertheless the defendant as well as his wife and the two physicians believed the services to be for the benefit and advantage of the patient, so that under the admitted facts, a promise to pay therefor was implied as an inference of law." [§ 183] 11. Liability of Person Employing Physician for Another[31]—a. In General. The general rule is that one who calls upon a physician to render services to another is not liable for those services in the absence of an express agreement to pay therefor,[32] if defendant is not legally bound to furnish such service to the third person.[33] The payment of prior bills for medical services rendered to another,[34] or the payment of his hospital bills,[35] or a request that the physician's bill be allowed to run until a later date,[36] will not create a liability to pay for medical services to another in one not otherwise obligated to do so; nor will payment of part of the medical bill of another create a liability to pay the remainder in one not otherwise obligated.[37]

[§ 184] b. Under Express Agreement. One person may by express contract make himself liable for medical services rendered to himself[38] or another;[39] and the rendering of the services is sufficient consideration to support the contract.[40] The consent of the patient is not necessary to the validity of an express contract on the part of another to be answerable for the physician's compensation.[41] The father of a married woman is liable under his promise to pay for medical services rendered to his daughter at his request, despite the legal responsibility of her husband;[42] but where an adult child has contracted to pay for medical services rendered to him, his father is not liable on an oral promise to pay.[43] Where defendant authorized another to inform a physician that defendant would pay for services to third persons, but, instead of such statement, an unauthorized and unwritten guaranty by defendant was communicated to the physician, defendant is not liable.[44]

Subsequent assumption of liability. The liability is not affected by the fact that it was not assumed until after the physician had made several visits to the patient without the knowledge or procurement of the promisor,[45] this liability being an original undertaking on his part;[46] but one who assumes liability after visits have already been made will be liable only for services rendered after such assumption, and not for those prior thereto,[47] unless the terms of the assumption are such as to indicate an intention to be liable for the entire treatment.[48]

Subsequent visits or treatment. If one engages a physician to attend an urgent case, and makes no limitation as to time, he is liable to such physician for all subsequent visits, until the physician's services are dispensed with.[49] A physician hired generally by an employer to treat an injured employee may recover for a second operation, if he finds it necessary, as for any other medical or surgical service rendered.[50]

[§ 185] c. Under Implied Agreement. The law does not raise an implied promise on the part of a person, who requests a physician to perform services for another, to pay for the services so rendered,[51] unless the relation of such person to the

[a] Reason for rule.—"A humane policy encourages the summoning by others of medical aid for those who may be stricken and unable to act for themselves. It would be quite easy in such a case for the physician to inquire if the person making the request intends to become personally bound; and when he fails to do so, he has no one to blame except himself for having acted upon a mere request without an assurance that the party making it intends to incur a personal liability. The physician should remember that persons commonly call for medical aid for the sick solely out of a spirit of kindness, irrespective of relationship, and without any expectation of becoming personally responsible." Becker v. Humphries, 34 Ga. A. 644, 650, 130 SE 379. To same effect Norton v. Rourke, 130 Ga. 600, 61 SE 478, 124 AmSR 187, 18 LRANS 173; Williams v. Brickell, 37 Miss. 682, 75 AmD 88; Meisenbach v. Southern Cooperage Co., 45 Mo. A. 232; Smith v. Riddick, 50 N. C. 342; Garcia v. Preston, 17 Porto Rico 556.

[b] Physician requesting services of another.—A physician operating on a patient for a nominal fee, in a private room of a hospital, is not liable under an implied promise to pay another physician, also a member of the hospital staff, for the services of the latter in completing the operation at the request of the former, the services being held to be a matter of professional courtesy or duty. Gilday v. Hennen, 79 Misc. 252, 139 NYS 934.

[c] Superintendent of the work in which an injured employee was engaged is not personally liable for the compensation of a physician whose employment was suggested by the physician engaged and consented to by the superintendent, he being under no legal obligation to pay for the services rendered to the injured employee. Whitney v. Holloway, 194 Iowa 1333, 190 NW 930.

[d] Person giving bond for support.—An action to recover for medical services rendered at the request and for the benefit of a person for whose support a bond has been given by defendants cannot be maintained against defendants, there being no implied authority on the part of such person to obtain such assistance at their expense or credit. Shaw v. Graves, 79 Me. 166, 8 A 884.

And see cases infra this section.

[a] Agreement implied.—(1) A telegraphic dispatch sent by defendant to an infirmary as follows: "I have just learned of L.'s accident. Show him every attention, and I will pay expenses," authorizes the procurement of a physician not connected with the infirmary, and obligated defendant to pay for whatever services were rendered by him. White v. Mastin, 38 Ala. 147, 148. (2) Where plaintiff doctor asks defendant who will pay for the treatment of a child injured by defendant's car, and defendant replies: "Doctor, I will pay all bills," defendant's oral reply is an original promise from which can be inferred a contract to pay plaintiff for the value of the services rendered. Douglass v. Brandt, 99 Conn. 161, 162, 121 A 179.

[b] Agreement not implied.—(1) Although, where there had been a custom on the part of an employer to call a physician to attend injured employees and to have him finish his treatment of injuries at the employer's expense, the physician would have the right to believe, on being called in the usual way, that the person injured was an employee and that the services rendered would be paid for by the employer, yet, on the physician's being notified that the injured person was not an employee, no contract can be implied on the part of defendant to pay for services thereafter rendered. Burton v. Fletcher Mfg. Co., 28 R. I. 345, 67 A 366. (2) Where defendant, a plantation physician, directs the overseer to call plaintiff physician to attend a case, but plaintiff is not told that his services are at the request of defendant, plaintiff cannot recover from defendant. Guerard v. Jenkins, 32 S. C. L. 171.

[c] Sudden emergency.—No liability arises where one acts for another in a sudden emergency. Raoul v. Newman, 59 Ga. 408; Starrett v. Miley, 79 Ill. A. 658.

[d] Consideration for implied contract.—Performance by a physician, without legal obligation, of services in treating a child injured by defendant, is valid consideration for defendant's implied contract to pay for the services. Douglass v. Brandt, 99 Conn. 161, 121 A 179.

54. Valentine v. Morgan, (Iowa) 222 NW 412.

55. Smith v. Riddick, 50 N. C. 342.

56. Foster v. Meeks, 18 Misc. 461, 41 NYS 950; Bradley v. Dodge, 45 HowPr (N. Y.) 57.

[a] Thus (1) the words "Doctor, I want you to come and attend my father" fairly imply that defendant was not acting as a messenger, but on his own behalf. Foster v. Meeks, 18 Misc. 461, 462, 41 NYS 950. (2) Where a person calls at the office of a physician, and in the absence of the latter leaves his business card, with this message written on it, "Call on Mrs. D, at No. 769 Broadway," and gives the card to a clerk in the office with a request to hand it to the physician and to tell him to "come as soon as possible," he becomes liable to pay the physician's bill in attending on Mrs. D in pursuant of such message. Bradley v. Dodge, 45 How Pr (N. Y.) 57.

57. Morrell v. Lawrence, 203 Mo. 363, 101 SW 571, 120 AmSR 660, 11 AnnCas 650; Clark v. Waterman, 7 Vt. 76, 29 AmD 150.

58. Liability of parent for necessaries furnished adult child generally see Parent and Child § 47.

59. McClenahan v. Keyes, 188 Cal. 574, 206 P 454; McClenahan v. Keyes, 65 Cal. A. 467, 224 P 241; Morrell v. Lawrence, 203 Mo. 363, 101 SW 571, 120 AmSR 660, 11 AnnCas 650; Crowell v. Donoho, 168 Mo. A. 305, 310, 153 SW 1082; Rankin v. Beale, 68 Mo. A. 325; Crane v. Baudouine, 55 N. Y. 256 [rev 65 Barb. 260]; Boyd v. Sappington, 4 Watts (Pa.) 247.

"We do not say the parent of an adult child may not become bound to pay for medical services rendered the child upon an implied promise, but we do hold that such promise must rest on facts and circumstances that would be incompatible with any other inference than that the parent intended to be regarded by the physician as his employer." Crowell v. Donoho, supra. To same effect Morrell v. Lawrence, 203 Mo. 363, 101 SW 571, 120 AmSR 660, 11 AnnCas 650.

[a] Where one parent calls a physician without the knowledge of the other, the latter is not liable for medical services performed for an adult child. Lind v. Zeisel, 26 Oh. A. 439, 159 NE 849.

60. Vorass v. Rosenberry, 85 Ill. A. 623; Crowell v. Donoho, 168 Mo. A. 305, 153 SW 1082; Crane v. Baudouine, 55 N. Y. 256 [rev 65 Barb. 260]; Shirley v. Madsen, (S. D.) 216 NW 601.

[a] Reason for rule.—"So far as legal responsibility was concerned, the defendant, though the father of the patient, was a stranger to her and to her necessities. . . . It was the duty of the plaintiff to know or to learn the true legal status of the patient, and what were her true legal relations to the defendant; and he raise an implied promise on part of the parent to pay for the physician's services, although the child is ill at the home of the parent.[61] Similarly, a physician who at the importunity of a mother treats her married daughter, who is living with her husband, first insisting on the husband's consent, cannot recover from the mother as on an implied promise to pay for his services.[62] But the circumstances may be such as to show an intention, on the part of a parent requesting or acquiescing in the services of a physician to his adult child, to be liable therefor, and a reliance on such intention by the physician, in which case the parent is liable.[63]

Services to other relatives. It has been held that, while a child is under no legal obligation to support an aged parent, yet if he does receive him into the family he is prima facie responsible for services which he calls upon a physician to perform for such parent.[64] The law will not imply, from the mere act of one in calling a physician to attend a brother[65] or a sister,[66] a promise on his part to pay for the services rendered; but circumstances and statements may show an intention or an implied promise to be liable for services to a brother[67] or to a niece.[68] There is nothing in the relationship of father-in-law and daughter-in-law from which the law will impose on the former the liability to pay for medical treatment of the latter;[69] and the presence of a son-in-law while his mother-in-law is being attended by a physician is not sufficient to show an implied promise to pay the physician.[70] One who calls a physician for a person who, although not a relative, is regarded as a member of the family, has been held liable for services rendered without notice that he does not intend to make himself liable.[71]

[§ 186] B. Amount of Compensation[72]—1. Under Express Contract. Where a physician or surgeon has made an express contract[73] with the person employing him, whereby he is to receive a stipulated sum for his services, his right to compensation is limited to the amount agreed upon;[74] but only the reasonable value, and not the contract price, will be allowed where there are special circumstances from which it appears that the contract was induced by fraud or improper or undue advantage over the patient or employer.[75] Where the contract calls for the performance of services of a specified nature, additional compensation may be recovered for serv-cannot rely upon any seeming legal and necessary dependence of her upon him. . . . [Manifestations of interest in the child's condition] are to be referred to natural affection and friendly sympathy, rather than to an acquiescence in the rendition of a personal benefit, or counted as acts done under a sense of legal obligation." Crane v. Baudouine, 55 N. Y. 256, 260 [rev 65 Barb. 260]. To same effect Crowell v. Donoho, 168 Mo. A. 305, 153 SW 1082.

[b] Payment of previous bills by a mother for medical services to her adult daughter, with the mother's own checks, but shown to have been at the daughter's request and charged against her inheritance, does not imply a promise on the part of the mother to pay for subsequent services by the physician to the daughter. Crowell v. Donoho, 168 Mo. A. 305, 153 SW 1082.

61. Rankin v. Beale, 68 Mo. A. 325; Crane v. Baudouine, 55 N. Y. 256 [rev 65 Barb. 260]; Lind v. Zeisel, 26 Oh. A. 439, 159 NE 849; Boyd v. Sappington, 4 Watts (Pa.) 247.

62. McGuire v. Hughes, 207 N. Y. 516, 101 NE 460, 46 LRANS 577, Ann Cas1914C 585; MacGuire v. Hughes, 126 App. Div. 637, 111 NYS 153.

63. Reinschmidt v. Dorough, 14 Ga. A. 409, 81 SE 252; Morrell v. Lawrence, 203 Mo. 363, 101 SW 571, 120 AmSR 660, 11 AnnCas 650; Best v. McAuslan, 27 R. I. 107, 60 A 774.

[a] Thus, where it was understood by plaintiff physician and defendant that plaintiff would not perform further services for defendant's son, who was sui juris, unless plaintiff was employed by defendant, defendant, by accepting the contract as so understood, must be held to have assented to it in that sense, although he did not expressly contract to pay for the services. Reinschmidt v. Dorough, 14 Ga. A. 409, 81 SE 252.

64. Hentig v. Kernke, 25 Kan. 559. See Rounsevel v. Osgood, 68 N. H. 418, 44 A 535 (holding that, where parents conveyed property to their daughter in consideration of her agreement to support, and to pay for necessary medical services rendered them, a physician rendering necessary services to the parents can recover therefor from the daughter, although he first rendered his bill to the mother, without knowledge of the agreement).

65. Knowles v. Massey, (Del. Super.) 81 A 470; Churchill v. Hebden, 32 R. I. 34, 78 A 337; Smith v. Watson, 14 Vt. 332.

[a] Reason for rule.—"Brothers are strangers" in respect of any obligation to take care of each other. Churchill v. Hebden, 32 R. I. 34, 78 A 337. To same effect Smith v. Watson, 14 Vt. 332.

66. Knowles v. Massey, (Del. Super.) 81 A 470.

67. See infra this note.

[a] Thus, where a sister of a man of twenty-five, without means and away from his family, and injured, writes to the physician who is treating him, inquiring as to the patient's condition and stating that the expenses will be paid, the physician may recover against her for services rendered after the receipt of the letter. Hall v. Allen, 46 Colo. 355, 104 P 489.

68. See infra this note.

[a] Thus, where one requests a physician to treat his niece, who is a member of his household, not informing him that the patient is not his daughter or that he did not expect to be held liable for the services, and pays a bill for drugs and the services of a nurse, the physician at first assuming that the patient was a daughter, a promise is implied on the part of the person calling the physician to pay for his services. Bigelow v. Hill, 129 Minn. 399, 152 NW 763.

[b] Two sums named.—(1) Under a contract for the performance of an operation, which provides that the compensation therefor shall be from two hundred dollars to four hundred dollars, the physician is entitled to recover two hundred dollars in any event, and the value of the services up to four hundred dollars upon proof of such value. Doyle v. Edwards, 15 S. D. 648, 91 NW 322. (2) Where the services of physicians are engaged under a contract to pay a stipulated sum therefor, and a larger stipulated sum on a stated contingency, the larger sum cannot be recovered if the contingency does not happen. Pons' Succ., 142 La. 721, 77 S 515, AnnCas 1918D 939.

[c] Where a sum is agreed upon with reference to the length of time the physician estimated the treatment would continue, the amount agreed upon may be recovered, although the treatment, which continued for some weeks thereafter, did not continue for the whole period estimated. Denenholz v. Kelly, 97 NYS 389.

[d] Average number of employees.—Where a physician was employed by defendants to attend their employees, at a certain amount per month for each employee, defendants cannot have deducted from the amount due plaintiff, on account of the final two months, in which he failed to give service, more than would be payable for an average of fifty men, which he, with their knowledge, ascertained from their books to be the average number employed during the two months. Mackenzie v. Newman, (Man.) 12 WestLR 631.

[e] Money or certificate of skill.—Where a contract for medical treatment called for the receipt by plaintiff physician of five thousand dollars in cash or a certificate of his skill, it was held that the five thousand dollars was not a penalty for refusal of the certificate, and that therefore, no certificate being given, such amount could be recovered as compensation for the services. Burgoon v. Johnson, 194 Pa. 61, 45 A 65.

Recovery of unpaid balance of agreed sum on death of patient see supra § 179 text and note 13.

75. Guild v. Whitlow, 162 Ark. 108, 257 SW 383; Butler v. Oldham, (Ark.) 224 SW 985.

[a] Thus (1) in case of emergency, where a patient or the person making the contract for him with a physician was laboring under such great excitement or stress of mind that an unconscionable advantage has

ices of a different nature;[76] but not for services incident to the original employment,[77] or for expenses incidental thereto;[78] nor can recovery be had for services performed after the expiration of the contract.[79]

[§ 187] 2. In Absence of Express Contract—a. In General. In the absence of an agreement as to the amount to be paid for the services of a physician, the law will imply a promise to pay the reasonable value of the services.[80] There is no presumption of law as to the value of a physician's services;[81] nor that a jury can ascertain their value without testimony from persons knowing something about such value.[82] The question as to what is a reasonable charge is one of fact.[83]

[§ 188] b. Elements To Be Considered in Determining Proper Amount[84]—(1) Customary Charge. A physician is entitled to recover the ordinary and reasonable charges usually made for such services as he has rendered by members of the same profession of similar standing.[85] Therefore, to prove the value of such services, customary charges of physicians for been taken of him, the contract will be set aside on the ground of fraud and recovery for services allowed on quantum meruit. Guild v. Whitlow, 162 Ark. 108, 257 SW 383. (2) Where a patient at the time of entering into an agreement with a physician was not of sufficient mental capacity, by reason of his illness, to transact business, the physician can recover only the reasonable value of his services, and not upon the express contract. Butler v. Oldham, (Ark.) 224 SW 985.

[b] Fraud is not shown: (I) By the fact that plaintiff charged more than other physicians and surgeons would charge for a similar operation in the same city. Guild v. Whitlow, 162 Ark. 108, 257 SW 383. (2) Where a patient, under no coercion, and of his own volition, paid a dentist for services an amount which the dentist told him was reasonable. Black v. Bearden, 167 Ark. 455, 268 SW 27.

[c] Adequacy of consideration for a note given by a patient to his physician in payment of his charges is immaterial in the absence of undue influence. Cole v. Wolfskill, 49 Cal. A. 52, 192 P 549.

77. Painter Fertilizer Co. v. Boyd, 93 Fla. 354, 114 SE 444.

[a] Thus physicians employed at an agreed compensation to obtain information as to cause of death cannot recover additional compensation for conferences with their employers held for the purpose of obtaining such information from the physicians. Painter Fertilizer Co. v. Boyd, 93 Fla. 354, 114 S 444.

78. Lakeside Sanitarium v. Dickens, (Tex. Civ. A.) 259 SW 1110.

[a] Thus, in action to recover for services rendered defendant's insane wife at a sanitarium, under a contract which provided for a stipulated payment per week, but which contained no reference to any charge for board, laundry, or medicine, there can be no recovery for such items in addition to the contract price. [c] Rendering of bill for a certain amount (1) to a third person, who did not appear as employing the physician, at the request of defendant, who employed him, does not prevent recovery from defendant of the reasonable value of the services. Rubin, etc., Shows v. Wagner, 86 Ind. A. 493, 158 NE 626. (2) Where a physician fixes his fee at a certain amount at the conclusion of his services, and sends a bill for that amount, he can recover only that amount, and not a greater one, whatever may be the actual value of his services. Hyman v. Vitrano, 2 La. A. 59.

[d] Fee not limited by provisions of Workmen's Compensation Act, where a physician's treatment of employees was under a contract with the employer, who may extend his liability beyond what the law requires. [§ 189] (2) Nature of Case; Amount of Attention Given. The nature and difficulty of the case,[91] its duration,[92] the time devoted to it,[93] the amount of services rendered,[94] the number[95] and length[96] of the visits, and whether they are made during the day or at night,[97] are factors which may be taken into consideration in determining the compensation to which a physician is entitled.

[§ 190] (3) Professional Standing. A physician may show his professional standing, as bearing on the value of his professional services.[98]

[§ 191] (4) Skill and Learning; Manner of Treatment. Evidence of a physician's skill and learning is competent to be considered in estimating the value of his services,[99] as is his experience as a physician,[1] even though his qualifications are not in dispute.[2] It has been held that a surgeon who skillfully performs an operation is entitled to the same compensation as one more learned and skillful who could perform the same operation no better.[3] Evidence of the performance of an operation in an unfit place is competent on the question of the reasonableness of the charge therefor;[4] and evidence that a physician, after promising, as a condition upon his continued employment, not to treat smallpox cases, continued to do so, and communicated smallpox to the patient, is admissible as ground for reducing his recovery for services to the patient.[5]

[§ 192] (5) Daily Income; Loss of Other Practice. In determining the value of a physician's services it is immaterial what his average daily income from his profession was or had been.[6] It has been held that a contract for a physician's services should not be construed to give him compensation for loss of business while away from his office, in addition to compensation for the services, unless the language employed is susceptible of no other construction.[7] But where services have been rendered in compliance with a patient's request that they be given exclusively for a time, to the abandonment of other practice, the usual charges are not sufficient compensation, and the nature of the contract and its effect upon the physician's practice may be considered in determining the proper amount.[8]

[§ 193] (6) Financial Condition of Person Employing Physician. As to whether the financial condition of a person receiving the services of a physician, or at whose request they are rendered for another, or the value of the estate of such a person, may be considered as affecting the propriety and reasonableness of the physician's charge, there is a conflict in the authorities, some cases holding that these elements may be considered and evidence received as to them,[9] while others hold that evidence bearing on these elements may not be received,[10] except where there is evidence of a recognized usage, which has grown into a custom, to graduate professional charges with reference to the financial condition of the patient, so that it may be considered that the services were rendered and accepted in contemplation of it,[11] or in rebuttal of evidence from the other side attempting to show the custom of a lower standard.[12] It has been held that the financial condition of one to whom medical services were given while he was unconscious may not be considered on the question of compensation;[13] but there is authority to the contrary.[14]

[§ 194] (7) Other Elements. Other elements which have been held proper to consider on the question of a physician's remuneration are the inconvenience[15] and expense[16] to which he was subjected, and the previous relations between the physician and the patient or his family.[17]

[§ 195] c. Opinion Evidence.[18] Physicians may give their opinions as experts as to the value of the services rendered in an action for compensation.[19] But one not a physician is not competent to express his opinion as to the value of such services.[20] It has been held that, where medical witnesses disagree as to the value of medical services, the correct rule is to allow the lowest estimate.[21]

Life has a pecuniary value of variable quantity." Mortimer's Est., 13 Pa. Dist. 51, 29 Pa. Co. 387. (2) "This state of affairs the law must recognize, that physicians should not have their services valued as you would commodities in trade by a fixed standard; what would be a proper charge for the same service to a man fully able to pay would be excessive to a man of limited means, and what would be willingly done for the indigent without thought of financial reward should be compensated for by one who can afford to pay on the scale which doctors of repute measure as the proper one." cines, travel, and attendance.[23] The common counts is an appropriate remedy for medical services rendered under an express employment to pay an undetermined compensation of a named value, not paid by defendant.[24] A statute prohibiting a physician or surgeon from disclosing information acquired by him in a professional capacity[25] does not deprive him of his cause of action for services if he can prove them by proper evidence.[26]

Effect of workmen's compensation acts. Where an employer expressly contracts with a physician for services to his employees, such contract is enforceable through the courts, unaffected by provisions of workmen's compensation acts as to procedure;[27] and there is no election of remedies on the part of the physician in the fact that the employee had proceeded against the employer under the Compensation Law.[28]

[§ 197] 2. Defenses. Matters of defense involving questions as to a physician's right to recover compensation for his services have been considered in preceding sections,[29] as, for example, the effect of his failure to exercise skill and care.[30] A plea of set-off, based on a tort in giving defendant an overdose of medicine, has been held improper as matter of defense, in an action by a physician for compensation for his services.[31] One who, knowing of a physician's habits of intoxication, nevertheless continues to employ him cannot set up the intoxication as a defense in such an action.[32] A statute prohibiting an unauthorized practitioner from recovering his fees[33] may be pleaded in defense to an action therefor.[34] In jurisdictions, where it is provided by statute that one denying the physician's claim for compensation on the ground that he has not complied with the statutory prerequisites for admission to practice must give notice of his intention to dispute the claim on such grounds before the commencement of the action,[35] a failure to give such notice renders the defense on such grounds unavailable.[36] The fact that a physician, at the request of defendant, makes out his bill to a third person, who has not appeared as employing the physician, does not prevent a recovery by him against defendant.[37] To an action for compensation for the services of a physician in examining defendant and testifying, as a medical expert, as to his condition, it is a sufficient defense that the physician, through ignorance and negligence, testified that defendant was insane, which was untrue, defendant being damaged by the testimony.[38]

[§ 198] 3. Parties.[39] Where a physician, who is in partnership in the management of a hospital with a person not licensed to practice medicine, sues for his own professional services to a patient at the hospital without joining his partner, there is no defect of parties plaintiff.[40]

[§ 199] 4. Pleading[41]—a. Declaration, Complaint, or Petition. Where a physician suing for fees for his services is presumed to be qualified,[42] the complaint need not allege compliance with the statutory requirements for admission to practice;[43] but some authorities hold that qualification must be pleaded.[44] In an action for the value of services rendered by a physician, it has been held sufficient to allege that he is a physician, that he was employed as such, that he rendered the services alleged, and that the reasonable value thereof was the amount sued for.[45]

Where the action is for services to a third person,[46] the complaint must show a request by defendant for the performance of the services, a promise

[a] As against objection to evidence.—A complaint in an action for services as physician is sufficient, as against an objection to evidence, although it does not allege that plaintiff received a diploma from some medical college, or was a member of a state or county medical society, as provided by Rev. St. § 1436. Rider v. Ashland County, 87 Wis. 160, 58 NW 236.

[a] Averments in connection with copy of original entry.—A statement of claim is sufficient which avers that plaintiff rendered services to defendant to an amount stated, as shown by a copy of the book of original entry attached, and that the charges were reasonable and proper, taken in connection with the copy of the book of account attached, showing the number and respective dates of plaintiff's professional visits, and the sum charged for each visit. Paist v. Spittall, 56 Pa. Super. 408.

46. Liability see supra §§ 183–185.

to pay, or the existence of facts from which a promise to pay would be inferred.[47] If the action is on an open account, it is not necessary to allege an express agreement by defendant to pay.[48] An allegation that services to defendant's son were rendered at defendant's instance and request is sufficient, whether the son was a minor or an adult;[49] likewise, in a complaint against a railroad company[50] or other employer[51] for services to an employee, a count "for services rendered at the special instance and request of the defendant" is sufficient. A physician's petition based on the theory that the third person to whom he rendered services was a dependent member of defendant's family, for whose necessities defendant was responsible, should allege the facts showing such dependency and liability.[52] A complaint for attendance and medicine furnished several persons at defendant's request should itemize as to each person the amount charged for visit or examination, for medicine, and other items of service.[53]

Where the point at issue is the amount of the fee due, an allegation in the declaration as to the notoriety of the case and the putting of plaintiff's professional reputation at stake cannot be connected with the point at issue, and will be struck out.[54]

[§ 200] b. Plea, Answer, or Affidavit of Defense. Want of authority to practice need not be specially pleaded in defense to an action for medical services rendered,[55] and may be availed of under a plea of the general issue in assumpsit;[56] but failure to deny an allegation in the statement of claim that plaintiff is a duly registered physician admits such registration.[57] To authorize the defense of recoupment or counterclaim, defendant should either plead the matter specially, or else plead the general issue, and, at the same time that plea is interposed, give notice of the special matter relied on.[58]

An affidavit of defense[59] which does not explicitly aver that the number of visits charged for were not made, or name a number which had not been exceeded, but only avers uncertainty as to the number of days on which two visits were made, is insufficient;[60] and an allegation that the charges are excessive, unfair, and unwarranted is indefinite, in the absence of a statement as to the rate agreed upon or, in the absence of agreement, as to the usual and ordinary rate.[61]

[§ 201] 5. Issues, Proof, and Variance[62]—a. Issues and Proof. Where the answer admits the medical services, but denies the value alleged, defendant may show under such allegation that the treatment by plaintiff was unskillful.[63] Where the answer admits a contract for medical services, and alleges that the amount was not agreed upon, but should be the usual fees, it is competent for either party to introduce evidence as to the value of the services.[64] Under the common counts for a quantum meruit, it is competent for defendant to prove the real value of the services,[65] or that they were of no value;[66] and, where plaintiff produces evidence to prove the value of his services, defendant may, under a general denial, show that the services were valueless,[67] or of less value than claimed.[68] Under a plea of the general issue in assumpsit evidence may be given to show want of authority to practice.[69] Under an allegation that "plaintiff rendered professional services," he cannot prove services rendered by another physician acting for him.[70] The evidence should be confined to the services rendered within the dates as named in the issue.[71]

In an action on a note for medical services,[72] a plea of no consideration is insufficient to support proof that a payment was made to the physician under an agreement that it covered all treatments, or that the treatments were gratuitous, without such facts being pleaded.[73]

[§ 202] b. Variance. In an action for medical services to defendant's minor son, proof of the necessity of the services, the approval of them by defendant while they were being rendered, and a promise to pay afterward, sufficiently tends to support the allegations of the petition that the services were rendered at the instance and request of defendant and that they were necessary.[74]

[§ 203] 6. Evidence[75]—a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof—(1) In General. In conformity to general rules[76] a physician or surgeon seeking to recover compensation for his services has the burden of proving the case in the first instance.[77] He has the burden of proving that he is a physician,[78] that he was employed to render professional services,[79]

[a] Thus, where a physician brings an action against a street railway company to recover for professional services rendered to an injured passenger, and plaintiff avers that he was employed to render such service by the claim agent of defendant, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the claim agent had general authority to employ a physician, or special authority in the particular instance, or that his engagement of plaintiff was ratified by defendant, or that defendant had so held him out as its agent that it was estopped in denying his authority. Weldon v. Lehigh Valley Tract. Co., 27 Pa. Super. 257.

Burden of showing promise to pay see infra § 211.

and that the services were rendered.[80]

[§ 204] (2) Qualification To Practice.[81] While there is authority to the effect that a physician in an action to recover compensation for services has the burden of proving compliance with statutory requirements as to qualification for practice,[82] the rule more generally laid down is that such qualification will be presumed,[83] and that the burden of proving failure to comply and want of authority is on defendant.[84]

[§ 205] (3) Value of Services. Where the amount of his compensation is not fixed by agreement,[85] the burden is on the physician to prove the value of his services,[86] but the value to be proved is the ordinary and reasonable price for services of the nature of those rendered,[87] and not the value to defendant.[88] It has been held that if, in a suit by a physician upon a quantum meruit for his services, the satisfactory performance of the services at defendant's request is not disputed, plaintiff has established a prima facie right to recover the reasonable value of the services,[89] and that, if defendant contends that an express contract fixing the value was made, he has the burden of proving such contract.[90] A physician, suing for an amount alleged to be the reasonable value of the services, and testifying to the whole treatment, service, and engagement, is under no necessity of segregating for each attendance and treatment.[91]

[§ 206] (4) Necessity of Visits. While the person employing a physician may, by special directions, limit the number of his visits,[92] in the absence of such directions the physician is the sole and proper judge for the necessary frequency of his visits,[93] and so long as the patient is in his charge it will be presumed that the visits made were deemed necessary and were proper.[94]

[§ 207] (5) Skill and Care. The presumption is that such services were performed in an ordinarily skillful manner,[95] and where want of such skill in their performance is alleged as a defense, the burden of proof is on defendant.[96] Furthermore, where want of skill and care is set up in defense to the physician's action for services,[97] the burden of proof is on defendant to show that no want of care on his own part tended to consummate the injury complained of by him.[98]

[§ 208] (6) Promise To Compensate. Medical attendance being valuable, the law presumes a promise to pay,[99] unless it clearly appears that the services rendered were intended to be gratuitous.[1] A physician suing a sheriff for services rendered to a prisoner at the request of the sheriff has the burden of proving an express agreement by the sheriff to

[b] Statutory prohibition of recovery by unlicensed practitioner.—Where the statute expressly provides that no action shall lie in favor of any person for services as a physician unless he shall have been legally licensed prior to the rendering of the services claimed for, it is necessary for plaintiff, in an action for medical services rendered, to prove that he was duly licensed in order to make out a prima facie case. pay him.[2]

Change of person liable. A physician who, after rendering services on his patient's sole responsibility, enters into a contract with another by which the latter is to become responsible for his subsequent services, has the burden of showing such an agreement on the part of the latter.[3]

[§ 209] (7) Payment. There is no presumption that the services of an attending physician have been paid for at regular stated intervals,[4] as for domestic service.[5] A physician who from time to time is paid for his services to the employees of a company out of a fund made up from their wages has the burden of showing exceptions or limitations in the contract which would relieve him of the obligation of supplying his services generally without further remuneration.[6]

[§ 210] b. Admissibility.[7] The general rules governing the admissibility of evidence[8] apply in an action by a physician to recover compensation for services rendered.[9] Hence, evidence that is not competent, not relevant, or not material is inadmissible,[10] as is also evidence having a tendency to prejudice the jury,[11] although evidence tending to remove such prejudice is admissible.[12] In the subjoined notes will be found particular applications of the general rules, in determining the admissibility of evidence sought to be introduced, with respect to the fact or nature of the employment of the physician or the agreement regarding his services;[13] custom as to payment for a physician's services;[14] value of

[a] Thus (1) evidence as to the result of the treatment by a physician subsequently employed is inadmissible, as his treatment cannot alter the value of plaintiff's services. Gardner v. Tatum, 81 Cal. 370, 22 P 880. (2) In an action by a physician for services rendered a third person at defendant's request, a statement filed by the injured with an insurance company in which he stated that he thought he was entitled to doctor's bills, and the amount thereof, is inadmissible, in the absence of evidence that the statement was brought to plaintiff's knowledge. Hertel v. Cuba, 186 Mo. A. 190, 171 SW 565.

[b] A firm agreement between plaintiff physician and another regarding the operation of the hospital where plaintiff attended defendant is immaterial to defendant and inadmissible, not being an assignment of any claim by plaintiff for his services. Hall v. Allen, 46 Colo. 355, 104 P 489.

11. Henderson v Hall, 87 Ark. 1, 112 SW 171, 25 LRANS 70; Boyd v. E. O. Painter Fertilizer Co., 83 Fla. 429, 91 S 557

[a] Thus to permit the introduction of a letter written after the termination of the medical services, relating solely to an offer to render future services, and containing matter that would have a tendency to prejudice the jury against the writer, and serve no purpose in throwing light on the matters in litigation, is reversible error. Boyd v. E. O. Painter Fertilizer Co., 83 Fla. 429, 91 S 557.

12. Boyd v. E. O. Painter Fertilizer Co., supra.

[a] Thus the exclusion of evidence of proper authority given to physicians to perform an autopsy, in a suit against a corporation alleged to be liable to pay therefor, is error, since such evidence would tend to relieve plaintiffs of the imputation of having mutilated the body without authority, which might prejudice the jury against plaintiffs. Boyd v. E. O. Painter Fertilizer Co., 83 Fla. 429, 91 S 557.

13. See cases infra this note.

[a] Evidence held admissible: (1) In determining whether defendant put himself under a primary or collateral liability to pay for services to a third person. May v. Roberts, 28 Okl. 619, 115 P 771. (2) To show custom of a physician, employed by a corporation at one of its plants, to treat employees of another plant. Woodward Iron Co. v. Dabney, 205 Ala. 615, 88 S 873. (3) To show the number of lodge members, on which physician's compensation was to be based, under contract, and his readiness and willingness to perform. Page v. Cohen, 80 Misc. 237, 140 NYS 935. (4) To show that entire charge of the patient was put in the physician's hands by the person employing him. Nims v. Cunningham, 8 Cal. A. 250, 96 P 785. (5) To show what operation the physician was authorized to perform, or what it was reasonably necessary to do for the patient. Hoxsey v. Murray, 84 Wash. 588, 147 P 205.

[b] Evidence showing the interpretation the parties placed on their relation to one another is competent to guide the jury to a determination of the real intention of the parties which it was necessary to ascertain in order to determine what contract they had made. Marshall v. Brown, (Mo. A.) 230 SW 347.

[c] Financial condition (1) of the person employing a physician is irrelevant on the question whether he bargained with the physician on a "no cure no pay" basis. Hollywood v. Reed, 55 Mich. 308, 21 NW 313. (2) In an action to recover on an implied contract of a father to pay for services rendered his son, where the physician knew of the financial standing of the father and son, evidence that the son was a man of considerable fortune, and amply able to pay for the services, is admissible on the question whether the physician thought the father intended to pay for the services he called him to perform. Morrell v. Lawrence, 203 Mo. 363, 101 SW 571, 120 AmSR 660, 11 AnnCas 650.

[d] Professional standing.—Evidence that a physician who is suing for services rendered is not of good repute is not competent to disprove his employment. Prietto v. Lewis, 11 Mo. A. 601; Jeffries v. Harris, 10 N. C. 105.

[e] Services outside of employment.—(1) In an action by physicians for the examining of a person injured through the negligence of another, the admission of evidence that they brought about a compromise of the claim for the injuries is erroneous, as leading the jury to assume that they should find for the value of the services in negotiating a compromise, as well as for their medical services. Henderson v. Hall, 87 Ark. 1, 112 SW 171, 25 LRANS 70. (2) Physicians rendering such services are not entitled to compensation for speculative incidents that may or may not follow from the services, and, after the settlement of the claim for the injuries, it was error to admit testimony that plaintiffs' services were worth a specified sum because they were not ordinary services, and because plaintiffs might have had to attend court as witnesses. Henderson v. Hall, supra.

[f] Gratuitous services.—It is competent for the opposing party to show that the services were rendered gratuitously. In re Scott, 1 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 234.

[g] Previously presented bill, not mentioning a special contract for services sued on, is inadmissible to prove that such a contract was not made. Doyle v. Edwards, 15 S. D. 648, 91 NW 322.

[h] Unauthorized telegram.—A telegram is inadmissible to show the employment of a physician to render services to a third person, unless it is shown to have been sent by, or by the authority of, the alleged employer. McClenahan v. Keyes, 188 Cal. 574, 206 P 454.

14. See cases infra this note.

[a] As between physicians.—(1) Evidence that the ethics of the profession forbid physicians from charging each other for services, and that it was the custom of physicians in a particular locality not to charge for such service, is admissible to negative an implied promise of one physician to pay for services rendered by another. Bremerman v. Hayes, 9 Pa. Super. 8. (2) The admission by plaintiff that he received a gift from defendant, that it is the custom among physicians to make no charge against a fellow physician or his family for services, and that he never rendered an account, constitutes a commencement of proof in writing permitting oral proof of defendant's offer of payment, before the gift, and plaintiff's refusal to accept payment. Brisset des Nos v. Dorval, 60 Que. Super. 37.

[b] In an action by an assisting physician against the physician as- his services;[15] want of skill or care on the part of the physician;[16] lack of benefit from his treatment;[17] and rights as between a physician and an employer to whose employee he rendered services,[18] or as between a physician and a company insuring such employer.[19]

[§ 211] c. Weight and Sufficiency.[20] The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence[21] apply in an action by a physician to recover compensation for his services.[22] In the subjoined notes are cases in which the evidence was held sufficient to show the employment of the physician,[23] including defendant's promise to pay for the services;[24] to show skill and care in the performance of the services,[25] or a lack thereof;[26] to show the amount recoverable as compensation;[27] or, generally, to support a recovery of compensation for services.[28] Also, below are cases in which the evidence was held insufficient to show, among other things,[29] the employment of the physician;[30] to show defendant's promise to pay for the services;[31] or, generally, to support a recovery for compensation for services.[32] It is not necessary that all the items of a physician's sisted, evidence of a local usage that the former shall look to the patient for his pay, in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary, is inadmissible, where it does not appear that such usage was known to plaintiff or was so well established as to warrant the legal presumption that the parties contracted with reference to it. Fitzgerald v. Hanson, 16 Mont. 474, 41 P 230.

15. Scanlon v. Anderson, (R. I.) 144 A 146.

[a] Evidence as to the reasonable value of the services of a physician who assisted another is proper, in an action by the former against the latter, where the evidence shows an arrangement as to the services, but not the terms of the arrangement. Scanlon v. Anderson, (R. I.) 144 A 146.

16. See cases infra this note.

[a] Evidence of declarations of plaintiff (1) as to the character of deceased's illness and directions as to its treatment, made out of the presence and hearing of deceased, is relevant to show that plaintiff was mistaken in his diagnosis, and prescribed erroneous treatment. McDonald v. Harris, 131 Ala. 359, 31 S 548. (2) Evidence by the patient's wife that plaintiff had stated that he would effect a permanent cure in three months is admissible, but only for the purpose of showing a want of ordinary skill. McDonald v. Harris, supra.

[b] Similar acts.—Evidence of the negligent administration of morphine by plaintiff physician to another patient is admissible to show the same administration to defendant's intestate, where both patients were administered to at the same time and place for the same disease and died within a day of each other. Kelty v. Fisher, 101 Or. 110, 199 P 188.

17. See cases infra this note.

[a] Evidence held admissible.—Pickler v. Caldwell, 86 Minn. 133, 90 NW 307.

[b] Worthlessness of medicine used.—In an action by a physician to recover an agreed fee under a contract to cure defendant "or no pay," where it is shown that defendant refused to submit to treatment, defendant may prove that the medicine used was worthless, and to do so may compel plaintiff, on cross-examination, to testify as to the ingredients of which it was composed. Jonas v. King, 81 Ala. 285, 1 S 591.

18. See cases infra this note.

[a] Evidence held admissible: (1) To show duration and quality of treatment of an employee by plaintiff physician, the danger of leaving him without medical care, and whether plaintiff had requested defendant's officials to furnish a surgeon in his place. Hall v. New York, etc., R. Co., 27 R. I. 525, 65 A 278. (2) Actions of station agent, to show how plaintiff physician was induced to begin services to an injured person found on railroad tracks. Dalton v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (Mo. A.) 238 SW 523.

[b] Decree of the industrial accident commission in a proceeding between an employer and an employee is inadmissible in an action by the physician against the employer for services rendered the injured employee under an express contract. Ferren v. S. D. Warren Co., 124 Me. 32, 125 A 392.

[c] Separate action by employee for medical expenses.—In an action by a physician against a store for services to an injured employee, the petition in a suit by the employee against the store, in which she claims a right to recover for medical services which she alleges she paid for, and an instruction in that suit that it appeared she had paid nothing for such services, are incompetent as evidence. Ghio v. Schaper Bros. Mercantile Co., 180 Mo. A. 686, 163 SW 551.

[d] The employer's liability insurance policy is properly excluded. Ghio v. Schaper Bros. Mercantile Co., 180 Mo. A. 686, 163 SW 551.

19. See cases infra this note.

[a] Insurance policy issued by defendant insurance company to insured is admissible in an action by a physician for services to an employee of insured. Lorie v. Lumbermen's Mut. Casualty Co., (Mo. A.) 8 SW (2d) 81.

[b] Payment of ambulance, nurse's and hospital bills by defendant insurance company is inadmissible in evidence in an action by a specialist, to show authority of a physician employed by the company to engage plaintiff, in the absence of a showing that the physician had no express authority to contract such bills. Lorie v. Lumbermen's Mut. Casualty Co., (Mo. A.) 8 SW (2d) 81.

21. See Evidence §§ 1730–1806.

22. See cases infra this section.

[a] Abandonment of treatment.—Evidence was held sufficient to warrant a finding that treatment by a physician was not abandoned until the time had expired in which a cure had been guaranteed and the failure of the treatment had been shown. Lyle v. Andalaft, 178 Mo. A. 172, 165 SW 1146.

[b] Failure successfully to treat.—In an action on a note executed to a physician on condition that he would effect successful treatment of the eye of defendant's wife, evidence of failure of the treatment was held sufficient to justify a verdict for defendant. Wilson v. Maddox, (Fla.) 121 S 805.

account be strictly proved;[33] he may recover by establishing the fact of his habit of keeping correct books of account, and that the account sued upon had been correctly copied from his books;[34] and, where there is evidence that the items in the account were rendered and charged to defendant and were reasonable, it cannot be urged, no objection having been taken, that because the account book was not formally introduced in evidence there is no evidence on which to base a verdict.[35] But evidence that plaintiff practiced in defendant's family, and was seen going and returning from defendant's house, coupled with proof that the items, as charged, were according to customary rules, will not create a legal presumption of indebtedness by defendant.[36]

Qualification and competence. A certificate of the proper public officer, showing due registration by a physician, is prima facie evidence of his right to practice.[37] Evidence that a physician had no license to practice in the county where he rendered services and that he was a resident of another state is sufficient to prove prima facie that he was unlicensed.[38] Testimony by defendant, not a medical expert, that plaintiff physician was incompetent is insufficient to warrant a finding for defendant.[39]

Payment.[40] A receipt "in full for medical services" is prima facie a satisfaction of the claim against the patient;[41] and the presumption of payment in full thus raised is not overcome by expert testimony that the services were worth more than the account receipted for.[42]

[§ 212] 7. Trial[43]—a. Questions for Court or Jury—(1) Questions of Law and Fact in General. General rules relating to questions of law and fact[44] govern in the trial of controverted issues of fact arising in actions by physicians to recover compensation for services.[45] Questions for the determination of the jury are whether there was an agreement to employ or pay for the services of a physician,[46] and whether the original agreement was superseded by a later one;[47] whether the contract to treat defendant's employees required the physician to treat employees in plants other than the one at which he was located,[48] and whether defendant accepted such services knowing that the physician looked to him for payment, so as to estop him from denying liability;[49] whether the services were intended to be and were accepted as gratuitous;[50] and whether the physician exercised reasonable care and skill in the treatment of his patient.[51] Where there is evidence that another person has an interest in plaintiff's bill for services, the question whether or not plaintiff is the owner of the claim in suit is one of fact.[52] The question as to the authorization of a physician to practice should not be submitted to the jury, where the undisputed testimony shows his compliance with the statutory requirements of the state in which the services were rendered.[53]

Reasonableness of charge. The question as to what is a reasonable charge for services in the absence of an agreement fixing the charge, is one for the jury,[54] or for the court passing upon questions of fact,[55] even though the testimony as to the value is undisputed;[56] but the jury have no right to ignore the testimony as to value and form an independent conclusion.[57]

[§ 213] (2) Taking Case from Jury; Direction of Verdict.[58] Where there is no evidence on which to submit to the jury the question whether there was an overcharge, as alleged, it is error to submit it.[59]

Demurrer to evidence is properly overruled where a physician, suing an insurer for services rendered at the request of another physician employed by defendant, testifies, in effect, that he expected to charge and be paid, but was not certain as to defendant's legal liability.[60]

Direction of verdict. Where there is no conflict in the evidence and no question of fact to be submitted to the jury, except as to the reasonable value of the services rendered, there is no error in instructing the jury to return a verdict for the reasonable value.[61] But the direction of a verdict, as a matter of law, for an amount based on the usual charges in the locality is error, the jury not being conclusively bound by such circumstances.[62] The direction of a verdict for plaintiff physician, in a suit on a note given by decedent for his services, is proper where decedent was in full possession of her faculties and acted freely and voluntarily, although it does not appear that she knew what he paid assisting physicians, or what services he performed.[63]

[§ 214] b. Instructions. In actions by physicians to recover compensation for services rendered, the general rules as to instructions in civil actions[64] apply.[65] Thus it is the duty of the court to state correctly the legal principles applicable in the particular case.[66] The instructions must conform to the pleadings and the evidence;[67] thus, where malpractice is relied upon as a defense, it is reversible error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury that, if they find as a fact that plaintiff was guilty of malpractice, he cannot recover for such services.[68] An instruction should not be given where there is no evidence before the jury to which it is applicable.[69] An instruction once given need not be repeated.[70]

[§ 215] 8. Review. A verdict plainly against the evidence will be set aside on appeal.[71] But where the evidence at the trial shows that the bill rendered by a physician was reasonable, a judgment for the amount will be sustained on appeal.[72] Where the evidence is sufficient to raise an inference of malpractice, a verdict for defendant will not be disturbed.[73] Conceding the necessity of proof of due qualification by a physician in an action to recover for his services,[74] the question cannot be raised for the first time in the appellate court.[75]

[§ 216] A. In General. Except when and to the extent that it is otherwise provided by particular applicatory statutory provision,[76] the law relating to voluntary associations[77] or to incorporated bodies,[78] as the case may be, applies to a medical society,[79] including its status,[80] its member-

[a] Right to practice.—(1) In an action for compensation for services rendered in a foreign state, if the facts as to the physician's authorization to practice in that state are in dispute, the court should charge the jury as to the requirements of the laws of that state. Feingold v. Lefkovitz, (Tex. Civ. A.) 147 SW 346. (2) Where plaintiff sues for services as a physician and nurse, not claiming separately for services as a physician, an instruction relating to his proof of license to practice as a physician is erroneous. Byrne v. Panesi, 77 Ill. A. 164.

[b] Value of services as dependent on benefits.—An instruction is erroneous which confines the jury, in the determination of the value of the services rendered, to a consideration of the benefits resulting to defendant therefrom. Ladd v. Witte, 116 Wis. 35, 92 NW 365.

[c] Instructions held proper.—Hutchinson v. Nettleton, 175 Ill. A. 277 (degree of knowledge, skill, and care required); Bailey v. Yowell, (Mo. A.) 266 SW 324 (liability of father for medical service to son as dependent on whether son was a minor or an adult).

[d] Instructions held erroneous or properly refused.—Guild v. Whitlow, 162 Ark. 108, 257 SW 383 (amount recoverable as affected by physician's representation to defendant as to reasonableness of charge agreed upon); Kelty v. Fisher, 101 Or. 110, 199 P 188 (negligence of physician in failing to inform relatives of patient as to patient's true condition and untruthfully informing them that he was not in a dangerous condition).

67. See cases infra this note.

[a] Instructions held proper or erroneously refused.—(1) Where defendant, by his failure to file exceptions to the ruling on his demurrer, is estopped to object that plaintiff had no right to practice medicine and collect for professional services, it is not error to instruct that, if plaintiff rendered and defendant accepted the services alleged, plaintiff is entitled to recover their value. Grantham v. Fleming, 13 Ga. A. 184, 78 SE 1113. (2) Where the defense is an arrangement with plaintiff physician by which he was to be paid by an insurance company for first aid to defendant's employees, and there is evidence that he requested payment of the insurance company, an instruction submitting to the jury the question of such arrangement is improperly refused. Ghio v. Schaper Bros. Mercantile Co., 180 Mo. A. 686, 163 S W 551.

[b] Instructions held erroneous or properly refused.—(1) The giving of an instruction holding defendant liable for the services of a consultant, if called in by the attending physician, is erroneous, where there is nothing in the pleadings or proofs to warrant it. Schrader v. Hoover, 87 Iowa 654, 54 NW 463. (2) Where defense is made on the theory that the services were worthless, there is no error in not instructing the jury on the subject of partial failure of consideration. Hinkle v. Burt, 94 Ga. 506, 19 SE 828. (3) In an action for services rendered defendant's adult son at defendant's request, and on his promise to pay therefor, based on services distinct from any rendered solely on the son's credit, an instruction requiring the jury to find that the agreement was made before rendition of any services for the son is properly refused. Mitchell v. Davis, (Mo. A.) 190 SW 357. (4) Where, by other instructions, the jury are restricted to the authority of a railroad claim agent to bind the railroad company by the employment of a physician, an instruction as to the authority of a station agent is properly refused. Dalton v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (Mo. A.) 238 SW 523.

[§ 217] B. Membership—1. In General. In accord with rules elsewhere stated,[86] a medical society may adopt by-laws or rules regulating the admission, conduct, discipline, expulsion, suspension, and reinstatement of its members.[87] But this power, even when conferred by statute,[88] is not an arbitrary or unlimited power;[89] the rules must be reasonable[90] and adapted to the purposes of the society,[91] and they cannot be made contrary to, or inconsistent with, the laws of the state.[92] On admission to membership in a society, the member assumes an obligation to conform to the rules and regulations of the society;[93] but these rules and regulations are obligatory on members alone,[94] and nonobservance previous to membership furnishes no legal cause either for exclusion or expulsion.[95]

Y.) 473 (an incorporated society was held powerless to expel a member without a previous conviction or indictment in a criminal court for the offense charged, except where the offense relates merely to the official or corporate character of accused, and amounts to a breach of the conditions expressly or tacitly annexed to his franchise or office).

Injunction against expulsion see porarily by suspension,[98] terminate membership in the society.

Investigation and hearing of charges.[99] General principles elsewhere stated[1] govern the procedure to be followed on seeking to expel or suspend a member.[2] Expulsion or suspension is in the nature of a judicial act following the investigation and hearing of the charges.[3] A member of a society whose by-laws provide for investigation before his expulsion is entitled to a fair trial before the proper tribunal.[4] The proceedings are not required to be as formal and technical as a trial at law;[5] it is sufficient if the constitution and by-laws are substantially observed,[6] notice given to accused,[7] and judgment pronounced from proper motives and in good faith.[8] The burden of proving the charges rests on the accusers.[9]

[§ 219] b. Resignation. In accord with general principles elsewhere stated,[10] membership may be terminated by the resignation or voluntary withdrawal of a member from the society.[11]

[§ 220] c. Reinstatement. Pursuant to principles elsewhere stated,[12] the reinstatement of an expelled or suspended member may be had in the circumstances and in the manner provided for by statute or by-law, if any, regulating the matter.[13]

[§ 221] C. Judicial Interference. With respect to interference by the courts with the internal affairs of a medical society, principles elsewhere stated[14] apply.[15] Whether or not a member has violated a by-law providing for expulsion or suspension is a question for the society to determine;[16] and courts cannot review the action taken by the society,[17] to prevent expulsion or suspension[18] or to compel reinstatement,[19] except where its authority has been transcended,[20] where fraud or injustice has been perpetrated,[21] or where authorized by [1813] c 94), a society had the power to adopt a by-law forbidding the acceptance of a resignation of any member while under charges. Ewald v. New York County Medical Soc., 144 App. Div. 82, 128 NYS 886 [rev 70 Misc. 615, 130 NYS 1024]. (6) Charges were filed against a member for misconduct, but a copy of them was not served on him at the time, because he was then under suspension for another offense. Later his suspension was remitted, and he was restored to good standing, whereupon he immediately tendered his resignation. Three days thereafter a copy of the charges was served on him, with a notice of hearing. It was held that he was under charges when he attempted to resign within a by-law of the society prohibiting acceptance of the resignation of any member under charges. Ewald v. New York County Medical Soc., 144 App. Div. 82, 128 NYS 886 [rev 70 Misc. 615, 130 NYS 1024].

statute to do so.[22] In any event, a member of a voluntary association must resort to and exhaust the remedies provided for by the association before he can apply to a court for relief.[23]

[§ 222] D. Obligation To Defend against Malpractice Claims. In adopting by-laws,[24] a medical society may provide for defending claims made against its members for malpractice,[25] and the duty to defend in such cases has been held mandatory[26] on proper application made to the society to defend.[27]

Failure to defend. In an action against a medical society for failure to defend plaintiff against malpractice claims, the burden is on defendant to prove that plaintiff's demand for aid involved a claim on which he was not entitled to aid.[28]

PHYSIOLOGY. The science of the functions of all the different parts and organs of animals and plants, the offices they perform in the economy of the individual, their properties, etc.[1]

PIANO.[2] The short and commonly used name for pianoforte.[3]

Electric piano.[4] A pianoforte whose wires are set in vibration by electromagnets instead of by hammers.[5]

PIANOFORTE.[6] A musical instrument of the percussive group, the tones being produced by blows of hammers upon stretched strings, and the hammers being operated from a keyboard.[7]

PIAZZA.[8] A veranda; a gallery.[9]

PICCAGE.[10] In English law, a term applied where the liberty of erecting a stall in a market is secured and the soil is broken in erecting the same.[11]

[a] Injunction against expulsion.—Brown v. Harris County Medical Soc., (Tex. Civ. A.) 194 SW 1179.

[b] Injunction premature.—Plaintiff was suspended for misconduct and afterward reinstated, and two days thereafter tendered his resignation, which was not accepted, and three days after the tender he was served with a notice of charges filed against him, and that a meeting would be held to consider them. If plaintiff was still a member, his suit against the society to restrain them from trying him on such charges was premature. Ewald v. New York County Medical Soc., 144 App. Div. 82, 128 NYS 886 [rev 70 Misc. 615, 130 NYS 1024].

[c] Mandamus to reinstate.—Reid v. Oneida County Medical Soc., 156 NYS 780 [aff 177 App. Div. 939 mem, 163 NYS 1129 mem].

[d] Consideration of evidence.—Although the court, in an action to compel the reinstatement of a member of a medical society, alleged to have been wrongfully expelled, cannot weigh the evidence presented against a member preliminary to his expulsion, it may say whether there was any evidence against him, and, if there was none, correct the action. Reid v. Oneida County Medical Soc., 156 NYS 780 [transf 176 App. Div. 899 mem, 162 NYS 1141 mem, and aff 177 App. Div. 939 mem, 163 NYS 1129 mem].

[e] State medical society is not a proper defendant in an action for reinstatement of a member of the county society, which had wrongfully expelled him, where by membership in the county organization he was also a member of the state organization, and the only action taken in the expulsion by the state organization was to review the decision of the county organization. Reid v. Oneida County Medical Soc., 156 NYS 780 [transf 176 App. Div. 899 mem, 162 NYS 1141 mem, and aff 177 App. Div. 939 mem, 163 NYS 1129 mem].

PIECEWORK.[55] A certain amount of work to be done upon material supplied by the employer, for which the worker is to be paid a certain price for the finished article instead of being paid by wages.[56]

PIECEWORKER.[57] One rendering personal services who is paid by the piece.[58]

PIER.[59]

PIERCED. Penetrated; entered by force; perforated.[60]

PIERHEAD. The projecting end of a pier forming a wharf or landing place.[61]

PIETY.[62]

PIEZA DE AUTOS. In Spanish law, the collection of papers constituting the record of a cause.[63]

PIG.[64]

PIGEON.[65] Any bird of the family Columbidæ; a dove.[66] It belongs to the class of animals feræ naturæ.[67]

PIG IRON.[68] The product of a blast furnace used for the purpose of reducing iron ores, and containing, among other things, a larger proportion or percentage of carbon than either steel or puddled iron bars. The term was derived from the shape which the iron assumed in the sand beds in which it was first cast; and when first used had reference to a particular shape or form. It has since acquired a larger meaning, and as used at present includes any product of the blast furnace that is cast in any convenient form or shape, without reference to what that form or shape may be. Among ironmasters and those who are familiar with the processes by which iron ores are reduced and made into pig iron and then manufactured into wrought iron or steel, the term has come to mean and include as well that substance in a molten or liquid state.[69] But since the solid form is in general necessary to the handling of it as an article of trade and commerce, most men see it in that form, and so, in common speech, the term carries with it the meaning of something that is solid and not liquid;[70] and that is also the meaning conveyed by many of the dictionaries.[71]

PIGMENT.[72] Any substance that is or can be used by painters to impart color to bodies; technically, a dry substance, usually in the form of a powder or in lumps so lightly held together as to be easily pulverized, which after it has been mixed with a liquid medium can be applied by painters to a surface to be colored.[73]

PIGNON. In French, a gable.[74] In a restricted sense, the upper and triangular part of a wall.[75] In an ordinary and popular sense the term means not only the upper and triangular part of the wall but the whole lateral wall, including the foundation;[76] the entire gable end.[77]

PIGNORATIO. In the civil law, the contract of pledge; and also the obligation of such contract.[78-80]

PIGNUS.[81]

PIGS or PIGGIES. In electrical construction, hollow cylinders of rubber, about three feet long, which, after being clasped about live wires, render the latter innocuous to those who may touch or come in contact with them.[82]

PIKE POLE. An instrument with a handle, about five or six feet long, containing a steel point at the end, which is used, among other purposes, in undermining gravel banks.[83]

PILE.[84] [§ 1] A. As a Noun. A heavy pointed timber forced into the earth to form a foundation for a building, wharf, or the like.[85]

In electricity, a term synonymous with "battery."[86]

[§ 2] B. As a Verb. To lay or throw into a heap; heap, or heap up; collect into a pile or mass.[87]

PILE DRIVER.[88] A machine for driving piles by raising, by means of power applied to the machinery, a heavy weight and dropping it upon the pile.[89]

Pile driver car.[90] A flat car on which is built a pile driver and an engine, which propels the car forward and backward with its own power by means of sprocket chains and wheels.[91]

PILE DRIVING.[92] Act of driving piles.[93]

PILE FABRICS.[94] In commercial usage, a generic term applied to describe certain varieties of manufactured goods, including velvets, plushes, velveteens, corduroys, etc.[95]

PILE SHEETING.[96] A structure erected along the sides or walls of an excavation to keep them from caving in and filling the excavation. It is constructed by laying a stringer upon a prepared ledge several feet below the surface, and driving upright planks into the earth back of it, thus providing a support for the walls or sides of the excavation.[97]

PILFER.[98] A word which, in its plain and popular sense,[99] means to steal;[1] to filch.[2]

PILFERAGE.[3] Filching;[4] petty larceny;[5] stealing[6] privily;[7] taking a small part only, rather than the whole.[8] In certain circumstances it is said to be a word belonging to the genus "pillage,"[9] and to mean ruin by depredations.[10]

Phrases: "Theft, robbery or pilferage,"[11] "you pilfered money out of that store."[12]

PILING.[13] The act or process of preparing piles and of driving them;[14] material from which to make piles, or that can be used as piles.[15]

PILLAGE.[16] The plundering, ravaging, or carrying off of goods, commodities, or merchandise by open force or violence.[17]

PILLAR-AND-STALL SYSTEM. In mining phraseology, a system of mining consisting in beginning at the mine opening, cutting tunnels or entries, and taking off rooms from them, leaving a roof of varying thickness, theoretically sufficient to sustain the overburden when pillars of sufficient size are allowed to remain; when the boundary of the mine is reached, the work then recedes, as much material as possible being obtained by robbing the roof and pillars coming back.[18]

PILOT.[19] A term in railway usage, applied to a person assigned to a train when the engineman or conductor, or both, are not fully acquainted with the physical characteristics, or running rules of the road or portions of the road, over which the train is to be moved;[20] also, the cowcatcher of an engine.[21]

[a] Other definitions.—(1) "A person taken on board at a particular place for the purpose of conducting a ship through a river, road or channel or from or into a port." The Andoni, [1918] P. 14, 18. (2) "A person whose mind dictates the course and controls the movements of a vessel in its passage through the waters of a channel, the configuration of the bottom of which, and all obstructions to navigation therein, he is presumed to know." trusted with the navigation of vessels on the high seas.[2] A pilot has also been defined as a "steersman"[3] or "guide."[4]

Nature of service. A pilot is such in legal contemplation when performing any duties properly falling within the scope of his employment,[5] but not when performing duties outside the scope of a pilot's employment.[6]

A "qualified pilot" within the meaning of an English compulsory pilotage statute has been defined as any person duly licensed by any pilotage authority to conduct ships to which he does not belong,[7] although his qualification will not extend beyond the limits of his license.[8]

"Pilotage" is a term that may refer either to the compensation for services performed by a pilot,[9] or to the act of a pilot in conducting a vessel.[10]

Half pilotage is compensation for services tendered and refused.[11]

A "branch" is the nautical term for a warrant or commission, authorizing the holder thereof to pilot vessels in certain waters.[12]

Cruising ground and pilot's water. In defining "pilot's cruising ground"[13] and "pilot's water" or "pilotage ground,"[14] the courts have stated that the terms are not synonymous.[15]

Pilot vessel. Even when cruising hundreds of miles from her home port, a ship is a "pilot vessel, engaged on her station on pilotage duty" within the meaning of the act of congress of March 3, 1885[16] if at the time she is looking or waiting for ships wanting pilots.[17]

[§ 2] B. Nature of Office. Under varying statutory provisions[18] it has been held that a pilot is a public officer[19] or not a public officer;[20] but in any event his office is so far public as to be subject to regulation.[21] There is authority holding that a pilot is not an executive officer.[22]

II. REGULATION OF PILOTS[23]

[§ 3] A. In General. Being engaged in public service,[24] pilots must accept public regulation.[25]

[§ 4] B. As Incident of National Sovereignty. Every nation has the inherent right to regulate pilotage of vessels within its waters, whether such vessels be domestic or foreign.[26]

[§ 5] C. In United States—1. As between Congress and States. Prior to the adoption of the federal constitution the states had the right to regulate pilotage of any vessels operating within their waters,[27] and pilot laws existed in several states prior to that time.[28] There were, however, no pilotage laws in America prior to the revolution.[29] Under the commerce clause of the federal constitution,[30] congress was given the right to regulate pilotage of vessels engaged in foreign or interstate traffic,[31] and pilot regulations are regarded as regulations of commerce.[32] But to the extent that congress has not exercised its right, the original[33] and concurrent[34] right of the states to regulate pilotage remains in full force and effect,[35] especially under federal statutes expressly confirming the rights of the states in this respect.[36] To the extent that congress has acted, its laws are paramount over all conflicting state laws,[37] which are inoperative in so far as they conflict with federal statutes,[38] but only to the extent of such conflict.[39] Federal legislation suspends conflicting state pilotage laws without repealing them.[40] It does not, however, supersede a state law to which it is merely cumulative,[41] or have a retroactive effect.[42]

While this subject was embraced within the grant of the power 'to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States' (Art I § 8), Congress did not supersede the state legislation, but by the act of August 7, 1789" expressly confirmed the right of each state to regulate pilotage within its waters. "This was 'a clear and authoritative declaration by the first Congress, that the nature of this subject is such, that until Congress should find it necessary to exercise its power, it should be left to the legislation of the States;' and it has long been established by the decisions of this court that, although state laws concerning pilotage are regulations of commerce, they fall within the class of powers which may be exercised by the States until Congress shall see fit to act." trol of such state and not of congress as respects the right to regulate pilotage of vessels not engaged in interstate or foreign commerce.[43]

[§ 6] 2. As between Several States. Pilotage on waters wholly within one state cannot be regulated by the law of another state,[44] but the pilot laws of a state have sufficient effect beyond its boundaries to fix the compensation of its pilots.[45]

[§ 7] 3. Particular Federal Statutes.[46] United States statutes forbidding and abrogating all state laws which discriminated in the rates of pilotage or half pilotage between vessels sailing between the ports of one state and vessels sailing between the ports of different states have been construed as rendering inoperative any state laws which contained such a discrimination,[47] but not those which were nondiscriminatory.[48]

[§ 8] 4. Particular State Statutes.[49] State statutes have been upheld which require masters of vessels bound to ports within the state to accept the first licensed pilot offering his services,[50] require an applicant for a pilot's license to be a qualified voter,[51] restrict the right to pilot noncoastwise vessels to those duly appointed by the state,[52] or require a certain percentage of pilotage fees to be paid to state pilot commissioners.[53] A state statute giving officers of cities meeting certain specifications power to regulate pilots is not objectionable as a special law because only one city in the state meets such specifications where the statute is general in its terms.[54] A state statute requiring "moneys belonging to the state" to be paid into the state treasury has been construed as inapplicable to a percentage of fees collected by licensed pilots and paid to the board of pilot commissioners.[55]

[§ 9] 5. Territories.[56] In granting to territories the power to make laws on any "rightful subject of legislation," congress by necessary implication gave to territories the power to make pilotage regulations.[57] Within the meaning of the federal statute relating to boundary waters,[58] a territory is a "state."[59]

[§ 10] 6. Boundary Waters[60]—a. In General. Under federal statutes[61] a vessel compelled by law to take a pilot[62] upon waters boundary between two states may take a pilot licensed by either state.[63] But if it take a pilot from neither, it will be subject to pilotage or half pilotage[64] on tender and refusal of services by a pilot from either under state or territory laws so providing.[65] A state statute profor violating Act [1853] c 467 § 29, regulating pilotage in the port of New York, is not barred by the act of Congress of August, 1866, regulating pilotage in harbors as well as at sea, where the act for which the penalty is sought was done before the passage of the act of congress, although the action therefor was brought afterward).

No. 17,726a (holding, however, that the Florida act of March 7, 1879, exempting vessels owned wholly in the state from the payment of any pilotage under the existing state laws, unless a pilot is actually employed, is not in contravention of such statute, but is in contravention of the United States constitutional provision that no preference shall be given to the ports of one state over those of another by way of regulation of commerce).

[a] For example, a state can establish a compulsory system of pilotage as to vessels coming from the sea into inland ports, and as to vessels going from her inland ports to the sea, without establishing a compulsory system of pilotage as to vessels trading between her inland ports respectively, and no discrimination in state pilotage laws forbidden by the United States statutes is thereby made. hibiting anyone not licensed under authority of the state from piloting a vessel to a port within the state is void so far as it interferes with the employment on public waters of pilots licensed by other states bordering thereon.[66]

[§ 11] b. What Are Boundary Waters. There is is early authority to the effect that waters connecting two states but not in any real sense a boundary between them are nevertheless boundary waters within the meaning of the federal statute,[67] but later authority holds that, to be within the meaning of the statute, waters must be a boundary in a real rather than a fanciful sense[68] and must have the significance of a monument on a boundary line.[69] It is settled that a port situated upon a continuation of boundary waters, but at a point where such waters lie wholly within one state, is not located on boundary waters within the meaning of the statute.[70]

[§ 12] 7. Delegation of Powers to Pilot Boards or Commissions.[71] Congress may lawfully delegate to local boards or commissions the power to make pilotage regulations for the local district.[72] Under a similar power of delegation,[73] state legislatures may lawfully authorize local boards or commissions to make pilotage rates[74] and regulations,[75] including regulations as to the general duties of pilots,[76] their qualifications for license,[77] the suitability of pilot's boats,[78] and the limitation of cruising grounds.[79] The power of the state in this respect is inherent and not conferred by the United States.[80]

[§ 13] D. In England. Since April 1, 1913, pilotage in England has been regulated by the Pilotage Act.[81]

[§ 14] E. In Canada. Since the confederation of the provinces, the fundamental power to regulate pilotage has been vested in the central dominion government rather than in the provincial governments.[82] and binding in respect of acts and conduct of pilots outside of the territorial waters of the promulgating authority.[92] Under statutes or regulations limiting the jurisdiction of a board of pilotage commissioners to claims under a specified amount, such board cannot grant a pilot's claim for a larger amount.[93]

In Canada the powers of pilot boards are governed by the provisions of the Canadian Shipping Act.[94]

[§ 17] 2. Particular Regulations—a. In General. Regulations held reasonable and within the particular statutory authorization include: Rules regulating the position of station boats;[95] the locality[96] and the circumstances[97] at or under which pilots should offer their services to incoming boats; the motive power of a pilot boat;[98] determination of the number of pilots for a port;[99] the selection of pilots' apprentices;[1] and the time and circumstances under which a pilot must return to his station boat.[2] A rule requiring submission to port wardens of disputes between two or more pilots is valid,[3] as is a rule providing that the pilotage for a particular channel shall be carried on by a single vessel.[4]

Regulations held invalid because unreasonable or in excess of the particular statutory powers of a board include: Rules requiring permission of the board for a pilot to take an apprentice,[5] or limiting the number of apprentices;[6] and regulations designed primarily for the benefit of the pilots to the detriment of the public they serve.[7]

[§ 18] b. Regulations as to Rates.[8] Power to fix pilotage rates[9] has been held to include the power to determine what proportion of regular rates may be collected when a pilot's services are tendered and refused.[10] A statute forbidding commissioners to fix pilot rates more often than once every two years should not be construed as preventing an earlier correction of a rate making order which contained clerical errors and which had not yet become effective because not duly entered,[11] especially where no new rights have been established or new duties imposed;[12] and the courts will review such orders irrespective of the foregoing where cross error on the merits is assigned.[13] In determining the validity of pilotage rates fixed by commissioners, the courts will consider the rates at other ports only in so far as similar conditions prevail;[14] whether pilotage is compulsory, which is an argument for reduction;[15] the physical characteristics of the harbor as affecting danger and difficulty of navigation;[16] and the necessary overhead expenses of the pilots and their association.[17] On the whole evidence the court will determine the validity of the rates.[18] Argumentative and advisory matter contained in an order or opinion fixing rates will not be considered in determining the validity of the order.[19] Where commissioners so empowered by statute fix pilot rates, they are exercising a delegated legislative function and not a judicial function,[20] and are therefore not bound by the restrictions of a court of record as to reversal of a decision.[21]

[§ 19] 3. Enforcement of Regulations.[22] Within the limitations imposed by statute,[23] a board of pilot commissioners may prescribe and enforce reasonable pecuniary penalties for violations of their regulations.[24] The commissioners under the various statutes as to the trial and punishment of pilots, are a court exercising punitive powers;[25] and, while they are not bound by the strict and technical rules which govern courts of justice,[26] they are ordinarily required to give an accused pilot due notice and opportunity for hearing,[27] and can try him only for the offense charged.[28] The rules of practice governing local inspectors of pilots ordinarily require such inspectors to furnish a pilot on trial with a copy of the charges against him,[29] and provide for an appeal to the supervising inspector,[30] who is required to investigate the charges under the same rules prescribed for local inspectors.[31] It has been held that, in the absence of express statutory authorization, commissioners cannot summon a pilot to trial on their own motion, but must await the filing of a complaint by a third party.[32]

[§ 20] C. Delegation of Powers by Commission.[33] Pilot commissioners or boards cannot delegate their powers.[34]

[§ 21] D. Liability. Under general rules[35] pilot commissioners are not liable in damages for discretionary acts within the scope of their authority and jurisdiction,[36] but may be liable for ministerial acts beyond their jurisdiction.[37] Pilot commissioners have been held liable in their corporate capacity for pilotage dues illegally collected,[38] and, where breaching a duty to take action against the owners of a vessel subject to, but refusing, compulsory pilotage, may be liable to a pilot for fees which he would have earned had they fulfilled such duty.[39] Pilotage authorities may be held liable for damages resulting from a breach of the duty, where imposed, of securing attendance of pilots in the waters under their charge,[40] but are not liable for damages caused by the default of a pilot licensed by them.[41]

IV. LICENSES[42]

[§ 22] A. Authority To Require. Congress has the power to restrict the right to pilot vessels whose pilotage is regulated by it[43] to persons who have obtained a federal license.[44] A state has the authority to compel a federal licensed pilot to take out a state license in order to pilot in state waters vessels whose pilotage is under state control.[45]

[§ 23] B. Necessity. Under statutory provisions and regulations it is usually necessary for every pilot to have a license.[46] The pilot of an enrolled vessel doing coastwise trade may be compelled by federal statutory provisions to have a government

[a] Entry of a formal judgment is not necessary to make the sentence of a pilot's suspension legal. Low v. Pilotage Comrs., R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 302.

[b] Not entitled to jury trial.— Low v. Pilotage Comrs., R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 302.

[c] Employment of counsel.—(1) The court will not on mandamus reverse the action of the commissioners in the removal of a pilot, because the pilot was refused the aid of counsel in cross-examining witnesses and in arguing his case. State v. Courtenay, 23 S. C. 180. (2) The commissioners may at their option employ counsel to aid them in the conduct of an investigation regarding a pilot's alleged dereliction of duty. Snow v. See Lunt v. Davison, 104 Mass. 498 (holding, however, that if a pilot charged with misconduct is notified of his suspension by the board of trustees of the Boston Marine Society, and has opportunity to appear before the board, and it is then decided that his commission should be revoked and the commissioners accordingly revoke it, the revocation is final).

[a] Appearance following informal notice.—A condemnation of a pilot by the harbor commissioners of Montreal will not be quashed on the ground that accused was summoned by letter, if he appeared and defended himself on that notice alone. Auger v. Montreal Harbor Comrs., 3 Que. Pr. 553.

[a] Personal trust.—The power conferred upon a pilot commissioner by the Oregon Pilot Act is a personal trust, to be exercised for the public good, and cannot be delegated to another; and therefore one of such commissioners cannot authorize another to sign his name to a pilot's license, although it has been agreed or concluded between such commissioners that such license may be granted. The California, 4 F. Cas. No. 2,313, 1 Sawy. 596.

[b] Under Quebec statutory provisions delegating the selection of pilot's apprentices to a corporate body, it is unlawful, even though such body sanctions the practice for individual pilots to select apprentices and receive pay therefor, and money so paid may be recovered, as the payor is not in pari delicto. or federal license,[47] and under state statutes is ordinarily required to have a state license if he pilots a foreign[48] or registered[49] vessel in state waters.

[§ 24] C. Issuance—1. By Whom Issued. By act of Congress[50] the power to issue pilots' licenses for coastwise seagoing steam vessels is vested in United States inspectors of steamboats,[51] and under state statutes[52] the power to issue pilots' licenses for classes of vessels not regulated as to pilotage by Congress[53] is ordinarily vested in boards of pilot commissioners or port wardens,[54] or in the governor of the state.[55] In England, under statutory provisions,[56] the power to issue licenses is vested in local pilotage authorities.[57]

[§ 25] 2. To whom Issued.[58] Since the pilot board or officer has only the powers conferred by the act,[59] it must appoint pilots from the classes of persons named therein.[60] Within the limitations imposed by statute,[61] the issuing board or officer may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, make reasonable rules governing the issuance of a pilot's license,[62] including moral[63] and mental[64] qualifications, and their decision is final,[65] in the absence of unjustly discriminatory treatment.[66] Where, however, the board or officer has made an unreasonable regulation or acted in excess of statutory authority, such regulation or action is invalid.[67] Regulations have been held valid which require an applicant for license to appear personally for examination;[68] to present the written indorsement of one licensed pilot, and, where practicable, an indorsement by a master or officer under whom applicant served;[69] and to pass a written examination.[70] A regulation that no original license shall be issued to a naturalized citizen on less experience than is required of a native born citizen is valid.[71] A rule of supervising inspectors providing that an applicant for a pilot's license whose application has been refused shall not be reëxamined for one year is reasonable and valid.[72]

[§ 26] D. Effect and Form of License. The exhibition by a person of a warrant or license to act as pilot raises the presumption that he has the right to act as such,[73] so as to authorize a ship to receive him as its pilot,[74] and is competent court evidence of his appointment if in proper form.[75]

Form of license. Whether a pilot's license is in proper form will depend upon the particular statutory requirements and facts involved.[76]

Joslyn v. Nickerson, 1 Fed. 133.
[b] Signatures on license.—A pilot's license signed by only two of three of the commissioners, under the Oregon Pilot Act, is not a valid instrument, unless it further appears from the minutes of the board that the matter was acted upon and the license granted at a meeting of the commissioners when all three were present, or such license contains a direct recital or averment of such meeting and action in reference to such license. reduce[80] such license for adequate cause,[81] or without adequate cause where so empowered under statutes granting absolute discretion.[82] But in the absence of statutory authorization, commissioners cannot arbitrarily revoke or suspend a license without adequate cause,[83] or for an alleged violation of rules occurring previous to the date of the license;[84] nor can they refuse a renewal without first complying with statutory requirements as to notice;[85] and, where acting in excess of statutory authority, their revocation or suspension is void for lack of jurisdiction.[86] It has been held that commissioners cannot first suspend and later revoke a pilot's license for the same offense.[87] The precise cause need not be specifically set forth in the statute;[88] but as a statute providing for suspension or forfeiture of a pilot's license is penal, it must be strictly construed,[89] and has been held not to apply to a case where a lesser penalty was expressly provided by statute for a given offense.[90]

[§ 28] F. Review by Courts.[91] In a proper case,[92] depending on the practice of the particular jurisdiction,[93] appeal,[94] certiorari,[95] or mandamus[96] will lie to review the action of pilot commissioners respecting pilots' licenses. But where statutes intrust matters of revocation or suspension of a pilot's license to a specified administrative board, the courts will not ordinarily consider the matter prior to final action by such board,[97] and in the absence of conspiracy, failure to appeal to the supervising inspector as allowed by regulations following denial of a license by examining officials is fatal to applicant's right to a bill to restrain local inspectors from refusing him a pilot's license.[98] The findings of a pilot's board will not be reviewed in the absence of a question involving their jurisdiction[99] or the constitutional[1] or statutory[2] rights of citizens. Where a pilot seeks to set aside a suspension for alleged illegal fees collected under statutory regulation of fees, it is incumbent upon him to show a rule or statute justifying the fees collected.[3] Under some statutes it has been held that proceedings against pilots for dereliction of duty are so far criminal or quasi-criminal as to prevent a review of a court judgment in favor of defendant.[4] Individual pilots already licensed have no standing in court to oppose issuance of a license to an applicant,[5] although they may sue to restrain a pilot from acting without proper license.[6]

Section 3907 provides that licenses granted shall be annually renewed unless for good cause, to be determined by the board, in which case the holder of a license shall be notified ten days before the expiration of his license, and shall be entitled to a hearing, and it was held that, without such notice, the board has no power to withhold a renewal on the ground that it has determined to reduce the number of pilots).

VI. OBLIGATION TO TAKE PILOT

[§ 30] A. In General.[13] Statutory provisions, federal[14] and state,[15] requiring vessels not expressly or impliedly exempted[16] to take or pay a pilot whether inward or outward bound, are mandatory and must be complied with.[17] The purpose of such statutes is to create a body of seamen thoroughly acquainted with the harbor, to pilot vessels seeking to enter or depart, and thus protect life and property from the dangers of difficult navigation.[18] The provisions of a compulsory pilotage law have been held applicable to vessels of a foreign country,[19] although there is authority to the contrary.[20] Until navigation of an outward bound vessel has actually begun there is no penalty incurred for refusal to take a pilot,[21] and absence of a pilot at high water may excuse an outward bound vessel from obligation to take a pilot.[22] A deficiency of licensed pilots arising during a voyage may be temporarily supplied by unlicensed pilots.[23] A vessel may properly refuse a pilot tendering his services beyond cruising grounds established by regulation,[24] or proceed under her master's pilotage if no licensed pilot tenders services before she has crossed the pilotage line established for the port.[25] A state statute providing that a vessel coming into a given port "without the assistance of a pilot, the wind and weather being such that such assistance could have been reasonably given" shall not be liable for inward or outward pilotage "unless the service of a pilot be secured," has been construed as not changing the rule that a pilot seasonably offering his services must be accepted.[26]

25. Com. v. Ricketson, 5 Metc.

[§ 31] B. Vessels Exempt—1. In General. Vessels expressly or impliedly exempted by statute[27] are under no obligation to take or pay a pilot,[28] provided they fall within the exemption provisions of the statute,[29] and a pilot's tender of services to such a vessel will not raise an obligation to pay[30] pilotage[31] or half pilotage,[32] unless the exempt vessel has signaled and then refused the pilot.[33] A steamship with a master licensed as a pilot may be exempted by statute from the payment of compulsory pilotage.[34]

[§ 32] 2. Coastwise Vessels. Under federal[35] and state[36] statutes so providing, no vessel regularly employed in the coasting trade is obligated to take or pay a state pilot.[37] It has been held that the term "coastwise vessel" includes a domestic vessel sailing between Porto Rico and New York.[38] A vessel proceeding from one United States port to another is a coaster entitled to exemption from state pilotage laws even though registered, authorized, and later sailing from the second United States port to a foreign port.[39] The casual circumstance of a vessel's stopping at intermediate foreign ports from stress of weather or other nonbusiness cause will not change her character as a coastwise vessel;[40] but if her intermediate stop be periodic and on business she does lose such character so as to become subject to state pilotage laws as a vessel engaged in foreign commerce.[41] A vessel may be regularly employed in coastwise trade, even though not continuously so employed.[42]

[§ 33] 3. Towed Vessels. The fact that a vessel is without motive power of her own, and is in tow of a tug having on board a licensed pilot, does not relieve her from the duty of taking a pilot, where all vessels of her tonnage and draft are required by a

[b] Vessels engaged in plaster trade.—Under St. (1829) c 2, exempting American vessels engaged in the plaster trade between Boston and the province of Nova Scotia from the penalty imposed for not taking a pilot, and the federal treaty with Great Britain, providing that British vessels coming from British colonial possessions, and their cargo, shall be subjected to no other duty of tonnage or charge of any description whatever than would be levied on vessels of the United States arriving from the British possessions, British vessels engaged in the plaster trade between Nova Scotia and Boston are also exempt from the penalty. [a] "Coastwise vessel" defined under federal statute.—When the federal statute "refers to a coastwise sea going steam vessel, not sailing under registry, it must mean one that is enrolled and licensed for the coasting trade in the manner provided by law, whose license is renewable annually; a vessel sailing from one part of the coast of the United States to another, or which is employed in the whale or coast fisheries. It certainly does not refer to a registered vessel that may trade or sail to any part of the world, as it expressly declares, 'not sailing under registry.'" Murray v. Clark, 4 Daly 468, 474 [aff 58 N. Y. 684].

state statute to have a licensed pilot.[43] Under statutes exempting from compulsory pilotage ships which are propelled wholly or in part by steam between designated points, a vessel capable of independent navigation by sail but in fact being towed by a steam tug is exempt from pilotage.[44] The exemption granted coastwise vessels[45] does not extend beyond a tug with a coastwise license so as to include her unlicensed tow.[46] Vessels so damaged as to be incapable of independent navigation may be towed without a pilot on board the towed vessel.[47]

An English naval vessel is exempt from pilotage.[49]

VII. COMPENSATION[50]

[§ 35] A. In General. State licensed pilots are entitled to offshore pilotage, upon compliance with regulations, for services tendered or performed,[51] unless by special agreement compensation has been limited to inshore pilotage;[52] but where local regulations prescribe certain limits for cruising grounds, a pilot bespeaking a vessel beyond such limits is not entitled to compensation,[53] not even where he is accepted and acts if another pilot bespeaks the same vessel within the established cruising grounds,[54] the compensation in such case being payable to the second pilot.[55] A pilot under contract may recover for services tendered and refused,[56] or not completed because of fault of the master.[57]

One fee for pilotage "in and from." A statute providing for payment of pilotage "into or from" a certain port at specified rates according to tonnage or horse power has been construed as imposing one pilotage fee covering both inward and outward pilotage,[58] especially where past usage sanctioned such a construction.[59]

Physical disability not interfering with a pilot's performance of his duties does not deprive him of his right to compensation.[60]

In case of loss of vessel a pilot's wages are payable up to the time of loss.[61]

One hired in the dual capacity of ship's officer and port pilot and paid as officer is entitled to separate and additional compensation for services as pilot.[62]

A pilot's substitute is not entitled to pilotage unless a regular branch or deputy pilot.[63]

Pilot does not forfeit his compensation, in the absence of a statute or regulation so providing,[64] because of failure to obey regulations relative to the specifications,[65] registration,[66] or numbering[67] of his boat,[68] or because he does not keep a sufficient boat on the bar to cruise for vessels, or to supply vessels in distress with provisions and water;[69] but cannot recover for services performed after revocation of his license,[70] voluntary termination of a contract for pilotage,[71] or seizure of the vessel under protest.[72]

Under a Canadian statute prescribing pilotage rates for steamers employed in the fisheries of the colony, it has been held that English vessels so engaged are to be treated exactly as colony or provincial vessels.[73]

74. Amount of compensation gen-and Amount of Compensation. Under state compulsory pilotage laws,[75] a pilot whose services are duly tendered[76] and refused[77] becomes entitled to compensation,[78] which may be half pilotage[79] or full pilotage,[80] according to the provisions of the particular statute then in force.[81] The fact that circumstances later change so that a pilot's services are not needed will not deprive the pilot of his right to compensation.[82]

Pilot licensed under the laws of another state cannot claim the benefit of a local compulsory pilotage act.[83]

[§ 37] b. Nature.[84] A pilot's right to recover for services tendered but unperformed is quasi-contractual in nature,[85] not a penalty,[86] and survives repeal of the statute granting it.[87] Pilotage has been held not a toll under a state constitution.[88]

[§ 38] c. As Affected by Acceptance of Another Pilot. Under some statutes[89] subsequent acceptance of another pilot does not destroy the master's obligation to pay the fees of the pilot first tendering his services.[90] Under others it has been held that liability for pilotage fees on refusal of the first pilot offering his services arises only if the vessel subsequently takes no pilot at all.[91]

[§ 39] d. Outward Bound Vessel. Under some statutes or regulations[92] a pilot tendering his services to an outward bound vessel is entitled to no compensation if his services are refused,[93] while under others compulsory pilotage applies equally to outward bound vessels.[94] Irrespective of the rule relative to compulsory outward pilotage prevailing in the particular jurisdiction,[95] compulsory pilotage may be granted to an inward pilot offering outward services.[96]

[§ 40] 2. Tender and Refusal—a. Necessity. To establish the right to compensation for services not performed[97] there must be due tender by the pilot and a refusal of the vessel to employ him.[98]

[§ 41] b. Sufficiency of Refusal. Failure of a spoken vessel to slow down or turn toward the pilot boat[99] or the keeping up of her pilot signal[1] constitutes a sufficient refusal; but a master's noncommital reply to a pilot's inquiry ashore as to whether he requires an outward pilot is not a refusal sufficient to form the basis of an action.[2]

[§ 42] c. Sufficiency of tender—(1) In General. Whether or not a pilot's tender of services is sufficient to raise an obligation to pay him on refusal will depend upon local statutory provisions and

[a] Reason for rule.—The object of the statute and regulations is to create a body of skillful seamen, thoroughly acquainted with the harbor, and thus give protection to life and property. This object would be defeated to a large degree if the master were permitted to decline the services of a pilot and refuse him compensation for the trouble and expense of sailing out to tender services. regulations and the facts of the particular case.[3] A statute prescribing certain methods of tender does not necessarily exclude other methods.[4] Under statutory provisions and local regulations, requiring suitable boats to be attached to the pilot boat, a gasolene launch has been held proper so as to authorize collection of pilotage fees by a pilot speaking a vessel from such launch[5] and to be "attached" to the pilot boat, even though cruising at a distance of some miles.[6]

Mere inquiry of a master, as to whether he will need the pilot's services, is not a sufficient tender.[7]

Tender made on Sunday has been held valid under a state Sunday statute.[8]

[§ 43] (2) Place and Time. Where the matter is regulated by statute or regulation,[9] a pilot must tender his services within the territorial limits prescribed.[10] In making a tender to an outward bound vessel it is sufficient for the pilot to be present at the time and place appointed by the master without actually going on board if the master fails to meet him.[11]

Outward limits. In the absence of statutory prohibition[12] a pilot may tender his services at any reasonable distance from port,[13] the limits often being fixed by custom,[14] and a state may permit or require its pilots to tender their services to inward bound vessels at a greater distance from the shore than three miles, or the outward limit of the pilot ground,[15] it being the policy of the law to encourage an early tender of a pilot's services to inward bound vessels.[16] A tender made beyond the national[17] or state[18] territorial jurisdiction is valid so as to allow recovery of compensation under the law of the nation or state involved.[19] However, a tender of services by a pilot at an unreasonably long distance from port, and long before his services would be needed, is not such a tender as will subject the vessel to pilotage fees in case of declining his services.[20]

Inner limits. Under statutes or regulations establishing harbor lines respecting pilotage,[21] it has been held that to be entitled to compensation for services offered and refused,[22] including cases where a vessel not obligated to take a state pilot signaled for and then declined a pilot,[23] the tender must be made before the vessel passed such line, except where a sailing vessel merely tacked across and then back before finally entering.[24]

Time of tender. A tender made to an inward[25] or outward[26] bound vessel within a reasonable time before a pilot's services will be needed is sufficient. Where a vessel is due to sail at high water, the pilot must present himself at that time in order to make a tender entitling him to compensation.[27]

[§ 44] (3) Showing Documents of Office. Under some statutes,[28] to make a sufficient tender, the pilot must show his license or warrant to the master irrespective of the latter's demand,[29] while under others it is necessary only if demanded.[30] It is not necessary for a pilot to show his official bond.[31]

[§ 45] (4) Presence of Master. A statute requiring a pilot to make his offer to the master in his presence, in order to make it a sufficient tender of services,[32] ordinarily[33] is considered as mandatory and must be complied with.[34]

ute requires the pilot to inform the vessel that she will be held to pay the regular fees whether his services are accepted or refused,[35] this information is a condition precedent to his right to hold the vessel for pilotage fees for services tendered but not accepted.[36]

[§ 47] (6) Display of Pilot Signals. Display of the customary pilot signals on the usual cruising ground by a visibly approaching pilot boat is ordinarily a sufficient tender of offshore pilotage to an incoming vessel,[37] although some statutes require pilot commissioners to declare by rule what shall constitute a valid offer of pilot service by a signal addressed to the eye, and in so doing may prescribe the distance within which such signal must be made.[38] Under the federal statute no particular pilot signals are prescribed.[39]

[§ 48] C. Amount of Compensation[40]—1. Aside from Statute. Where no rate is fixed by statute for fees payable to pilots, they are entitled to be paid a reasonable reward for the services performed by them,[41] which may be fixed by express agreement.[42]

[§ 49] 2. Under Statute. When fixed by statute or regulation[43] a pilot is entitled to recover the amount or rate of pilotage so fixed;[44] and where rates are so fixed he cannot contract for fees at other rates.[45] The rates of pilotage within a state need not be uniform.[46]

[§ 50] 3. Extra Compensation. Pilots may recover extra compensation for services involving unusual risk or responsibility,[47] as where a piloted vessel is in a crippled condition,[48] and may under statute be allowed designated extra compensation for services rendered in moving or transferring vessels in the harbor,[49] for detention of the vessel after engagement of the pilot,[50] or for winter pilotage.[51] Where a pilot is under a statutory duty to assist vessels in distress, he cannot by contract exact an exorbitant compensation for extra services in so doing.[52]

[§ 51] D. Actions for Compensation—1. Jurisdiction. Courts of admiralty have jurisdiction in rem and in personam of claims for pilotage and half pilotage.[53]

[§ 52] 2. Pilot may be estopped by a bill rendered from suing for more than the amount thereby demanded.[57]

[§ 53] 3. Parties.[58] An action to recover pilotage fees, where the pilot's services are refused, may be brought by the pilot in his own name.[59]

[§ 54] 4. Pleading.[60] A complaint for pilotage fees must allege performance or tender of services,[61] and that no other qualified pilot was employed.[62]

61. Morciglio v. South Porto Rico Sugar Co., 12 Porto Rico Fed. 27.

62. Morciglio v. South Porto Rico Sugar Co., supra.

In a suit for pilotage fees against the owner of a vessel who has refused to accept the pilot's services, the petition is not defective because it fails to allege whether the vessel was coastwise or foreign; and if the vessel is exempt from the payment of such fees, it is a matter of defense, to be set up by plea.[63]

[§ 55] 5. Evidence[64]—a. Burden of Proof. In an action for services tendered but unperformed, the pilot has the burden of showing compliance with the statutory prerequisites to his action,[65] such as tender of services,[66] refusal of the same,[67] and, where required by statute, that no other pilot was employed.[68]

[§ 56] b. Admissibility. Parol evidence may be admitted to show the situation of a ship when the pilot took charge of her,[69] or the boundaries of a harbor or port.[70]

[§ 57] c. Weight and Sufficiency. The admiralty court determines facts upon principles which govern trials by jury,[71] and in accordance therewith evidence has been held sufficient[72] or insufficient[73] to establish particular issues.

[§ 58] E. Persons Liable.[74] In the absence of statute governing the matter, both owner and master may be liable for pilotage,[75] and the same may be true under statute.[76] A statute granting a pilot's lien on the vessel does not take away the pilot's right of action against the master.[77] Under particular statutory provisions[78] the agent of the vessel[79] or consignee[80] may be liable. The charterer of a vessel is not liable for extra pilotage growing out of a personal contract between the pilot and some third party.[81]

[§ 59] F. Lien[82]—1. Existence of Lien—a. For Services Performed. By the general maritime law a pilot has a lien upon a vessel for services actually rendered,[83] provided there is an express or implied contract between the pilot and one duly authorized to represent the vessel.[84] A pilot's lien cannot be predicated upon services performed by a pilot in some other capacity,[85] and it has been held that the lien does not arise from services rendered a boat while held under writ of execution,[86] nor when the pilot is employed to pilot a vessel on a voyage subsequently abandoned before rendition of services.[87] But when a pilot has been by express contract employed for a specified period, and wrongfully discharged after serving part of the time, he has a lien for the damages arising from breach of contract.[88]

[§ 60] b. For Services Tendered and Refused. There is authority holding that no lien arises for services tendered and refused,[89] but the weight of authority holds that a pilot has a lien for such services,[90] even though the statute does not ex-

72. Murray v. Clark, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 468.

[a] Evidence sufficient to support a finding of first tender.—Plaintiff pilot's affidavit that when an incoming vessel was two and one-half miles off shore, he ran up to within one hundred feet of the vessel and offered his services as pilot, that such services were refused by the captain, and that the captain did not then have nor later take any pilot was, in the absence of contradictory evidence, sufficient proof of a first tender by plaintiff entitling him to recover pilotage. Murray v. Clark, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 468.

73. See cases infra this note.

[a] Two witnesses contradicting one.—Where the sole question arising on a libel by a pilot for wages is as to when the charterers informed the libelant that he was to look to one of the charterers individually for payment, and the two charterers directly contradict the libelant, there being no other witnesses on that point, the witnesses being equally worthy of credit, the weight of evidence is against the libelant. Clark v. The Ruth, 39 Fed. 128.

[b] Evidence insufficient to show usage of charging and paying double fees as a legal right, even for services rendered to a vessel in distress. Love v. Hinckley, 15 F. Cas. No. 8,548, Abb. Adm. 436.

[c] Tender and refusal of services.—A claim for pilotage for a tender and refusal of services, supported only by the oath of the pilot, and contradicted by two witnesses from the other vessel, cannot be sustained where the pilot might have produced other witnesses to corroborate his testimony, whose absence he did not account for. pressly create a lien,[91] and a fortiori where it does.[92]

[§ 61] c. Services as Master and Pilot. There are authorities holding that services rendered by the same person as master and pilot do not give a pilot's lien.[93] Some cases apply the rule only where there is no segregation of the respective duties,[94] and there is authority to the effect that on due proof of the dual hiring and segregation of services as pilot, a pilot's lien can be enforced.[95] When one person contracts expressly as pilot, and another stands as registered master, the person so contracting has a lien for his wages, although the registered master does not sail in the vessel,[96] and although such pilot has entire charge of her navigation.[97]

[§ 62] 2. Priorities.[98] A claim against a tug for unpaid pilotage has been held superior to one for damages to her tow,[99] and there is authority that a claim for pilotage will be preferred to one founded on a previously executed bottomry bond.[1] Pilotage liens ordinarily rank equally with liens for mariner's wages.[2]

[§ 63] 3. Loss of Lien.[3] As in the case of other maritime liens,[4] a pilot's lien may be lost by unreasonable delay in enforcement,[5] but will not be lost by a reasonable delay.[6]

Waiver. Where a pilot is employed under a special contract with the charterer of a vessel, without knowledge of the owners, he may waive his lien, or more properly speaking, never secure a lien on the vessel.[7] But in the absence of a special agreement to do so, a pilot does not waive his lien by assenting to an arrangement whereby a part owner will account to him for pilotage,[8] nor by taking a promissory note not subsequently paid,[9] nor by presenting his claim to a court of bankruptcy.[10]

VIII. POWERS, RIGHTS, AND LIABILITY[11]

[§ 64] A. Powers and Functions. While exercising his functions a pilot is in sole control of the navigation of the ship,[12] and his orders must be obeyed as in effect orders of the master.[13] But the master is still in command of the vessel, as distinguished from its navigation, and may properly displace an obviously incompetent or intoxicated pilot,[14] although he is not bound to do so unless the pilot is making an obvious mistake.[15] A pilot employed for a complete voyage is subject to the master's discipline, although not liable to do ship's duty except when in charge of her as pilot.[16]

Canal boat pilots may, in the absence of owners or supercargoes, exercise the general powers of a master or captain.[17]

Particular functions. While in charge the pilot must see to getting the vessel under way,[18] give orders as to setting canvas,[19] decide in bad weather whether to get under way or lie fast,[20] decide when, where, and how to bring up,[21] and also give orders relative to the use of warps and lines when docking,[22] as to catting, letting to, and the mode of carrying anchors,[23] and generally tend the ship at anchor, after she has started or before she has docked.[24] The pilot must also determine the scope of chain and management of the helm where the ship steers or shifts with the tide,[25] whether it is necessary to let go a second anchor,[26] and must manœuver the vessel if the cable parts[27] or she drifts from her anchorage.[28] He must determine the speed of the ship,[29] what canvas to carry,[30] whether the employment of a tug is necessary,[31] and direct the navigation of the tug when his vessel is in tow.[32] A pilot must determine whether or not it is necessary to depart from ordinary regulations in navigating the vessel.[33] It is not a part of a pilot's duties to determine what lights should be carried.[34]

[§ 65] B. Right To Recover for Personal Injury. As between the owners of a ship and a compulsory pilot, there is no implied contract that the pilot will take upon himself the risk of injury from the negligence of the shipowners' servants, and the shipowners are therefore liable for any injury sustained by him which is due to the negligence of such servants.[35] A pilot may recover for injuries sustained in a collision with another boat notwithstanding contributory negligence by members of the crew of the piloted boat who were not under the pilot's control.[36] Recovery may be had against the master by a pilot assaulted by him.[37]

[§ 66] C. Liability for Damages[38]—1. In General. A pilot is personally liable for damages, caused by his negligence or default,[39] to the owners of the vessel[40] and to third parties for damages sustained in a collision.[41] Such negligence is a marine tort within the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty.[42] A pilot is not under an insurer's liability for damages occurring without his default.[43] Nor is he

[a] Reason for rule.—"A licensed pilot, enjoying the emoluments of compulsory pilotage, is quite in a different class from an ordinary employé. He assumes to have a skill and a knowledge in respect to navigation in the particular waters over which his license extends superior to and more to be trusted than that of the master, and from the moment he begins his duty he takes command and supersedes the master in respect to the navigation. His remuneration is fixed by law, and is proportionate to his responsibility, and his liability for neglect or want of skill must be in a similar proportion." Guy v. [a] Rule applied.—A pilot is not liable for damages caused by mere errors of judgment.[44] A pilot is responsible only for his own personal negligence,[45] which must be affirmatively shown,[46] and cannot be held accountable for damages proximately caused by the default of others.[47] But lack of a proper crew and of equipment for a vessel will not excuse the pilot for damages proximately due to his own default.[48] A pilot is liable for damages to a vessel proximately resulting from his leaving her before completion of pilotage.[49]

[§ 67] 2. Degree of Knowledge, Skill, and Care Required. A pilot should have a thorough knowledge of general and local regulations and physical conditions affecting the vessel in his charge and the waters for which he is licensed,[50] such as a particular harbor[51] or river.[52] He is not held to the highest possible degree of skill and care,[53] but must have and exercise the ordinary[54] skill[55] and care[56] demanded by circumstances, and usually shown by an expert in his profession.[57] Under extraordinary circumstances a pilot must exercise extraordinary care.[58]

The Sylfid, 169 Fed. 995 [aff 176 Fed. 1022 mem, 100 CCA 666 mem]. (2) Where the keel of a vessel, while being towed through the middle channel in Hell Gate, rubbed some object unknown, and subsequent examination of the boat showed no obstruction in the location where the libelant's evidence placed the course, and the evidence failed to show any negligence on the part of the pilot. [a] Disobedience of a pilot's orders by officers or crew of the piloted ship exempts the pilot from responsibility. Yap Tico v. Anderson, 34 Philippine 626.

[b] Master's negligence.—A pilot is not liable for damages resulting from a collision proximately caused by the excessive speed of a vessel under the master's direction. The Manchioneal, 243 Fed. 801, 156 CCA 313.

[c] Default of others not shown.—Where the pilot could have avoided a collision by dropping anchor at a certain time and gave the order to drop anchor, but at the suggestion of the master not amounting to refusal to obey, rescinded such order, he cannot avoid liability on the theory that the master's act caused the collision. The Griffdu, 25 F. (2d) 312.

48. Hice v. Kugler, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 336 (holding in an action by the owner of a canal boat against the steersman for negligence in allowing the boat to go too near a dam, whereby she was carried over and lost, it is no defense that she was not properly equipped and manned).

The Saluda, 29 F. Cas. No. 17,232; Campbell v. Williamson, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 198; Yap Tico v. Anderson, 34 Philippine 626.

[a] Generally speaking a pilot should "be a person of great and accurate knowledge of the difficulties and dangers of the particular navigation in which he is employed; well acquainted with the rules which arise out of the rights of others navigating the same waters, and always ready to regard those rights; cool and collected in dangerous and trying circumstances; not given to recklessness and passion in order to prove his courage; and always careful of the vessel committed to his guidance." Campbell v. Williamson, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 198, 199.

[b] Customary seasonal changes of buoys in local waters should be known to a pilot and he is liable for damages resulting from his ignorance thereof. Transportes Maritimos de Estados v. Rotch, 289 Fed. 115.

[c] The ordinary action of wind and sea on boats in his charge should be known to and anticipated by a pilot. White v. The Lavergne, 2 Fed. 788.

[a] For example, a harbor pilot "is selected largely on account of his personal knowledge of the local conditions affecting the safety of the vessel. He must be familiar with all such conditions. He must not only remember and avoid all the dangers of a physical nature, but he must also know and observe all the lawful regulations of the local authorities affecting the conduct of the ship." [a] Channel, depths, and shoals of a river bar should be known to the pilot. The Oceanic, 74 Fed. 642, 20 CCA 574.

[b] Constant and familiar acquaintance with the towns, banks, trees, etc., and the relation of the channel to them, and of the snags, sand bars, sunken barges, and other dangers of the river as they may arise, is essential to the character of a pilot on the navigable rivers of the interior. "He is chargeable for negligence if he fails in due care and skill in avoiding obstructions or difficulties known or which should have been known to him." The Dora Allison, supra.

[a] Skill possessed but not used.—In an action on the bond of a pilot and his sureties, it was held that evidence was properly rejected which was offered by defendant to prove that he possessed sufficient skill to pilot a boat, the question being not whether he possessed such skill, but whether in the present case he exercised it. Slade v. State, 2 Ind. 33.

[a] Passing out of the usual channel without any compelling cause is sufficient of itself to show negligence subjecting a pilot to liability for consequent damage to the vessel. China Nav. Co., Ltd. v. Vidal, 22 Philippine 121.

[b] Towing in a gale.—It is negligence in both the pilot of a tug and the master of an open, loaded boat to attempt to tow such a boat across the bay of New York in a gale of wind. The William Cox, 3 Fed. 645.

[c] Violation of rules by pilot who could have avoided a collision had he obeyed the same may be sufficient to show negligence. Guy v. Donald, 157 Fed. 527, 85 CCA 291, 14 LRANS 1114, 13 AnnCas 947 [cert questions answered 203 U. S. 399, 27 SCt 63, 51 L. ed. 245].

57. The Dora Allison, 213 Fed. 645, 646.

"The highest possible degree of skill and care was not probably required of the pilot; but he was bound to bring to the performance of the duty he assumed reasonable skill and care, and to exercise them in everything relating to the work. The skill required of a pilot is the ordinary care of an expert in his profession." The Dora Allison, supra.

licensed pilots,[61] or failing or refusing to take a pilot,[62] may be enforced as in the case of other penalties.[63]

[§ 69] B. For Acting as Pilot without License. A penalty imposed by statute[64] upon a person undertaking to pilot a vessel in or into particular waters, who has not been duly licensed as a pilot for such waters, may be enforced[65] in the usual manner;[66] and he may be penalized, even though he had a licensed pilot under his direction at the wheel,[67] and despite the fact that pilotage fees had been paid.[68] The penalty is imposed only upon the individual and not upon the ship,[69] and under a statute so providing may be recovered in the name of the master warden instead of in the name of the people.[70] An unlicensed pilot is not subject to a penalty for piloting a vessel exempt from the obligation to take a pilot,[71] and cannot be subjected to a penalty for performing services not amounting to pilotage under the statute.[72] Under such statutes, where no regularly licensed pilot seasonably offers his services, the master may employ any other person to pilot his vessel in, and such person may do so without incurring any penalty.[73]

Construction of statute. State statutes imposing a penalty upon persons without a state license who act as pilots after a state licensed pilot has offered his services must be construed in the light of United States statutes and United States supreme court decisions, since pilotage is fundamentally a matter of commerce falling within federal control.[74]

Master acting as pilot. Some statutes have been held to include masters without a pilot's license who bring in their own vessels,[75] while other statutes have been held inapplicable to masters piloting their own vessels.[76]

X. CRIMINAL OFFENSES[77]

[§ 70] A. In General. A pilot may be criminally liable under state statutes for issuing a false receipt for pilotage fees not in fact received,[78] or guilty of a misdemeanor under federal statutes for disobedience of established rules of navigation.[79]

[§ 71] B. For Acting as Pilot without License. Under a statute making it a criminal offense for a pilot to operate as such without a license,[80] a pilot so operating may be proceeded against by indictment or information.[81] A pilot operating under a license of one state purporting to give him authority to pilot in waters wholly within another state may be convicted of unlawful pilotage under a statute of the latter state.[82] An unlicensed pilot cannot be convicted for performing services not amounting to pilotage under the statute.[83]

Repeal of a state statute providing fine and imprisonment for operating certain vessels without a state license does not discontinue a prosecution then pending on appeal where another statute preserves the right of prosecution.[84]

As applied to ship's master. Under statute a master failing to employ a duly licensed pilot has been held subject to fine or imprisonment.[85]

Evidence.[86] In a prosecution for piloting a foreign vessel in state waters without a state license, clearance papers are competent evidence of destination,[87] entry papers of the port from which the vessel came,[88] and evidence of the name and port painted on the stern of the vessel is admissible to

XI. PILOTS' ASSOCIATIONS[90]

[§ 72] A. Nature of Organization. A pilots' association is quasi-public.[91] Whether or not the members of a pilots' association are in legal effect a copartnership depends wholly upon the powers and duties of the members with relation to one another under the provisions of the governing statutes and regulations.[92] The relation of a pilot to his association is not that of a servant to the master, but of an associate assisting and participating in a common purpose.[93]

[§ 73] B. Legality. An agreement among pilots to associate together for their common purposes and business is not unlawful.[94]

[§ 74] C. Rules. Reasonable rules or by-laws of a pilot's association are enforceable.[95]

[§ 75] D. Liability. Where, under local statutes and regulations,[96] pilot associations lack the necessary legal incidents of responsibility, they have been held not liable for damages caused by the default of a member pilot.[97] Where the members of a pilots' association are in legal effect a copartnership,[98] they cannot recover against a steamship piloted by one of their members which collides with and damages a vessel owned by the association.[99] The members of a pilots' association which lacks the power to select or discharge its members, or to control or direct their activities, are not liable for damages resulting from the tort of a comember in the performance of his duties as a pilot.[1]

PIMENTO (Spanish, Pimiento). Allspice or the allspice tree.[1]

PIMP.[2] A "male steerer" for houses of ill fame;[3] one who provides gratification for the lust of others;[4] a pander;[5] a procurer.[6]

[a] Under the statutes of Louisiana relative to the appointment of branch pilots of the port of New Orleans, and regulating their duties, a partnership or association of the said pilots, although state officers, for the purpose of furthering and protecting their common interests, is not illegal. Under the language of these statutes such association is authorized, and excepts the pilots from any legal principle which would forbid such an association of state officers for the purposes declared. [a] No power to contract for pilotage.—The pilots' association of the bay and river of Delaware, which is an unincorporated association of pilots, whose objects are limited to the management of pilot boats and the furtherance of the interests of its members in various ways, but which has no power to make contracts for pilotage, its members acting individually in that matter, does not stand in the relation of principal as to such contracts, and is not liable for the negligence or fault of one of its members in the performance of a contract made by him for such service. The City of Dundee, 108 Fed. 679, 47 CCA 581 [aff 103 Fed. 696].

[b] Not a commercial partnership.—The association of branch pilots of the port of New Orleans did not constitute what is known in Louisiana as a commercial partnership, in which the partners are liable to their creditors in solido; the association was not an insurer of the experience, skill, judgment, or conduct of any of its members; and therefore, when without fault itself, it was not liable for the negligence, want of skill, or fault of any branch pilot, belonging to the association, resulting in damage to any vessel such pilot might undertake to pilot into the Mississippi River from the sea. I. NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE

[§ 1] A. Piracy Jure Gentium—1. In General. Piracy has two aspects: (1) As a violation of the common right of nations, punishable under the common law of nations by the seizure and condemnation of the vessel only in prize courts. (2) Its liability to punishment criminally by the municipal law of the place where the offender is tried.[1] Accordingly the definitions of "piracy," aside from statutory piracy, fall naturally into two classes, according as the offense is viewed more especially as it affects the right of nations, or as amenable to criminal punishment under the municipal law.[2] Piracy, by the common law, consists in committing those acts of robbery and depredation upon the high seas, which, if committed on shore, would amount to felony there.[3] Piracy under the law of nations is a robbery or forcible depredation on the high seas without lawful authority, done animo furandi, in the spirit and intention of universal hostility.[4]

the piratical act, to come within the meaning of the law, must be done animo furandi.[5] By this nothing more is meant than that, as in robbery on the land, it must be done with a felonious intent, that is, willfully, with intent to injure, and without legal authority or lawful excuse.[6]

[§ 3] b. Commissioned Privateers.[7] Since a felonious intent is necessary to constitute the crime,[8] it has been held that one acting in good faith under a commission from a foreign power cannot be held guilty of piracy, even though such commission is not genuine.[9] If, however, seizures are made, not jure belli, but animo furandi, a commission is no defense to a charge of piracy.[10]

Commission issued by rebels who have not obtained recognition of belligerent rights from any sovereign power is no defense to piracy, and depredations upon the high seas committed by the holders of such a commission constitute piracy by the law of nations.[11]

[§ 4] B. Statutory Piracies—1. Murder, Robbery, etc., upon High Seas—a. Act of April 30, 1790. By the act of April 30, 1790,[12] it was declared that every person who committed upon the high seas,[13] or in any river, harbor, basin, or bay, out of the jurisdiction of any particular state,[14] murder[15] or robbery[16] or any other offense, which, if committed within the body of a county, would be punishable by death by the laws of the United States, was a pirate, and should suffer death.[17] It extended to all persons on board all vessels which threw off their national character by committing piracy on other vessels;[18] but robbery committed on board a vessel belonging exclusively to subjects of a foreign state, sailing under the flag of a foreign state, whose authority was acknowledged, was not piracy within the intent of this act, nor punishable under it in the courts of the United States.[19]

[§ 5] b. Act of May 15, 1820. The act of May 15, 1820 declared the person a pirate, punishable by death,[20] who committed the crime of robbery upon the high seas, in or upon any vessel, or upon any ship's company of any vessel, or the lading thereof.[21] The interpretation given to the words of this act applied the crime to the case of depredation upon any American vessel or property, on the high seas under circumstances that would constitute robbery, if the offense were committed on land,[22]

[a] Distinction between privateering and piracy is the distinction between captures jure belli, under color of governmental authority, and for the benefit of a political power organized as a government de jure or de facto, and mere robbery on the high seas, committed from motives of personal gain, like theft or robbery on land. In the one instance the acts committed inure to the benefit of the commissioning power, and in the other to the benefit of the perpetrators merely. A capture of a vessel and cargo by a Confederate privateer was held not to be within the terms of the insurance policy against perils of the sea, fires, pirates, assailing thieves, jettison, etc., but to be included in the exception "that said company shall not be liable for any claim for or loss by seizure, capture, or detention." [a] Commission to vessel as defense.—(1) Since a nation at war may commission private armed vessels to carry on war against the enemy on the high seas, such a commission is a good defense to a charge of which is the felonious[23] and forcible taking from the person of another, of goods or money, to any value, by violence or putting him in fear.[24]

[§ 6] 2. Running Away with Vessel. To constitute the offense of piracy within the act of April 30, 1790,[25] by "piratically and feloniously" running away with a vessel,[26] personal force and violence were not necessary;[27] but the intent must have been animo furandi.[28] Under an English statute,[29] deeming a pirate one who makes a revolt in a ship, an offense is committed where a crew or a part thereof combine to resist the captain, in order to force him to redress grievances,[30] although there is no intent to run away with the vessel or commit any act of piracy.[31]

[§ 7] 3. Confederating with Pirates. The act of April 30, 1790 provided for the punishment of anyone who combined, confederated, or corresponded with pirates, knowing them to be guilty of piracy or robbery.[32]

[§ 8] 4. Piracy under Color of Commission from Foreign Power. The act of April 30, 1790 declared that every citizen who committed any murder or robbery against the United States, or any citizen thereof, under color of a commission from a foreign power, should be considered a pirate.[33]

[§ 9] 5. Engaging in Slave Trade—a. In General. The slave trade is not piracy, unless made so by the treaties or statutes of the nation to whom the party belongs.[34]

[§ 10] b. Act of May 15, 1820—(1) Elements of Offense. Under the power to define and punish piracies, given by the constitution,[35] congress may declare to be piracy the service of a citizen or resident of the United States on a vessel used in kidnapping the inhabitants of a foreign country for the purpose of making them slaves, or the use of a vessel owned in the United States in such kidnapping.[36] This power was exercised in the act of May 15, 1820.[37] There are four descriptions of the offense to be found in this act: (1) Landing and seizing the negroes. (2) Forcibly bringing or carrying them on board. (3) Decoying them. (4) Receiving them on board of the vessel.[38] The first two acts comprehend force as an ingredient;[39] the latter two do not.[40] Intent[41] and acts, tending to make some one a slave,[42] are both necessary.

[§ 11] (2) Who May Commit. Any citizen, being of the crew or ship's company of any vessel, whether foreign or American, may commit the crime.[43] If accused is not a citizen, ownership of the vessel by a citizen is an essential ingredient of the offense.[44]

II. PUNISHMENT

[§ 12] A. Power To Punish—1. By Nations Generally. As general pirates are deemed enemies of the human race, making war upon all mankind indiscriminately, the crime being one against the universal laws of society, the vessels of every nation have a right to pursue, seize, and punish them.[45] It piracy under this act. U. S. v. Baker, 24 F. Cas. No. 14,501, 5 Blatchf. 6. (2) The United States courts will, however, treat as pirates all persons engaged in plundering vessels of United States citizens under authority of a government set up by insurgents against whom a civil war is being waged. It is sufficient that the negroes were under moral restraint and fear—their wills controlled by superior power exercised over their minds and bodies; and any person participating in such forcible detention is a principal in the offense. is by confounding general piracy with piracy by statute that indistinct ideas have been produced respecting the power to punish offenses committed on the high seas.[46] A statute may make any offense piracy, committed within the jurisdiction of the nation passing the statute, and such offense will be punishable by that nation;[47] but piracy, under the law of nations, which alone is punishable by all nations can only consist in an act which is an offense against all;[48] and no particular nation can increase or diminish the list of offenses thus punishable.[49]

[§ 13] 2. By United States.[50] There are two distinct provisions of the constitution by which congress is empowered to punish piracy. By the first article of the constitution congress is authorized "to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offences against the law of nations."[51] Furthermore the constitution in express terms gives authority to regulate commerce and to pass all laws necessary to carry that power into effect;[52] and the authority thus conferred upon congress has been exercised by a great variety of legislative enactments, and various offenses are denominated and punished as piracy.[53]

[§ 14] B. Seizure and Condemnation of Vessels[54]—1. Under Law of Nations. Under the law of nations a vessel captured for engaging in piracy becomes a prize on account of the universal war presumed to have been declared by the pirate against commerce and human kind at large.[55]

[§ 15] 2. Under Act of March 3, 1819. Under the act of March 3, 1819,[56] to protect the commerce of the United States and punish the crime of piracy, any armed vessel may be seized and brought in, or any vessel the crew whereof may be armed, and which shall have attempted or committed any piratical aggression, search, restraint, depredation, or seizure upon any vessel; and such offending vessel may be condemned and sold, the proceeds whereof to be destributed between the United States and the captors, at the discretion of the court.[57] The act extends to all armed vessels which commit the unlawful acts specified therein.[58] It is not necessary that there should be either actual plunder or an intent to plunder;[59] if the act be committed from hatred, or an abuse of power, or a spirit of mischief, it is sufficient.[60] The innocence or ignorance on the part of the owners of the prohibited acts will not exempt the vessel from condemnation.[61]

Condemnation of cargo is not authorized by this act;[62] nor does the law of nations require the condemnation of the cargo for petty offenses, unless the owner thereof coöperates in and authorizes the unlawful act.[63]

[§ 16] 3. Under Act of August 5, 1861. The supplementary act of 1861[64] subjects to capture on the high seas, and to seizure in port, vessels built, purchased, fitted out, in whole or in part, or held for the purpose of being employed in the commission of any piratical aggression, search, restraint, depredation, or seizure.[65]

[§ 17] C. Criminal Prosecutions[66]—1. Indictment. A charge that the piracy was committed "on the high seas, and within the jurisdiction of the court, within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, and out of the jurisdiction of any particular state," is a sufficient statement of venue, without any other specification of place.[67] Where the offense is such that the court has jurisdiction, although the vessel has no national character, no national character need be alleged in the indictment.[68] Since the offense of piracy is one which may be committed by one or more persons, an

[b] Reference to law of nations for definition.—The Act of March 3, 1819, § 5, referring to the law of nations for a definition of the crime of piracy, is a constitutional exercise of the power of congress to define and punish the crime. U. S. v. Smith, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 153, 5 L. ed. 57.

[d] Attack in good faith.—An attack on a vessel of the United States by an armed vessel, upon a mistaken supposition that she was a piratical cruiser, but without felonious intent, is not a piratical aggression, nor does it subject the vessel, if captured, to confiscation, under the law of nations. indictment charging three persons with committing the crime jointly is sufficient, and proof of the guilt of either one will authorize his conviction and the acquittal of the others.[69]

[§ 18] 2. Evidence.[70] Upon a prosecution for piracy, where there is no proof that in the first instance any unlawful acts were meditated by the commander of a vessel and her crew, it is not sufficient to prove piratical acts committed by the commander and his crew generally;[71] but it must be proved that each defendant participated in the taking, and did it feloniously.[72] It is unnecessary, on the trial of an indictment for piracy, to produce a merchant vessel's register, or documentary evidence, to prove her national character;[73] but such evidence is admissible,[74] and is prima facie sufficient to establish the nationality of the vessel.[75]

PIRATA. In Spanish law, a pirate.[1]

PIRATE.[3]

PISCARIA. All fisheries, without regard to their distinctive character, or to the method of taking the fish.[4]

PISCARY.[5]

PISTOL.[6] A gun;[7] a small, light firearm;[8] a small firearm, or the smallest arm used, intended to be fired from one hand, differing from a musket chiefly in size.[9] The name is derived from Pistola, in Italy, where pistols were first made.[10] The pistol is frequently the subject of statutory regulation.[11]

Pistol cartridges. Cartridges such as are adapted to, and are or may be used for, pistols of the size and calibre in ordinary use, including especially those capable of being carried about the person.[12]

Pocket pistol.[13] Such a pistol as a man ordinarily carries, or may conveniently carry, or actually carries on his person, in his pocket.[14]

PIT.[15] A cavity or hole in the ground, natural or artificial;[16] a large hole from which some mineral deposit is dug or quarried, as a gravel pit, a stone pit;[17] a quarry;[18] a shaft coupled with the underground workings to which access is had from the shaft.[19]

Of a locomotive tender the part of the tender next to the engine in which the coal for use in the locomotive is stored.[20]

PIT BOSS.[21]

PITCH.[22] Used with respect to common lands, a term designating the right under which a proprietor selects the general location of his claim or share, by entry and occupation.[23]

PITFALL.[24] A trap set to ensnare the unwary.[25]

PIVOT.[26] A fixed shaft or hub.[27]

PIVOTAL. Of the nature of or forming a pivot;[28] belonging to or constituting a pivot, or that upon which something turns or depends.[29]

Pivotal bridge spring. Of eyeglasses, a flexible strip of resilient metal used to connect the lens frames and hold them in position on the nose, the terminals of which are connected with the lens frames by engagements with pivots seated in the upper part of the frames, the pivots, in turn, being actuated by spiral springs.[30]

Dist. 14, 15, 17. (3) In the phrase "any desert, secluded, hidden, secret or solitary place," "place" is used in the sense of the immediate neighborhood, region, or vicinity (State v. Cook, 90 W. Va. 600, 603, 111 SE 595, 597; State v. Knosky, 87 W. Va. 558, 106 SE 642, 644), (4) and does not include a particular room or apartment (State v. Knosky, supra), (5) or an open garden (State v. Cook, supra). (6) In the phrase "any of the places under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States," "places" does not include land rented to be used temporarily as a camp. U. S. v. Tierney, 28 F. Cas. No. 16,517, 1 Bond 571, 572. See U. S. v. Carter, 84 Fed. 622, 625 (battleship not included). (7) In the phrase "any room, house, building, boat, vehicle, structure or place," following the rule ejusdem generis, "place" is limited to things of the same kind, something with walls or defined tangible limits, and does not refer to a city, town, or township. Koth v. U. S., 16 F. (2d) 59, 61. (8) In the phrase "house or place," "place" is not equivalent to "premises." Humes v. Taber, 1 R. I. 464, 470. (9) In the phrase "house or place for the conduct of such business," "place" includes any arbor or structure used in the business. Whitcomb v. State, 2 Tex. Civ. A. 301, 21 SW 976, 977. (10) In the phrase "no house, office, room, or other place," under the rule of ejusdem generis, "place" cannot include an inclosure at a race track. Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., Ltd., [1899] A. C. 143, 161. (11) In the phrase "place or county," "place" means any spot within the county. State v. Arnold, 80 S. C. 383, 384, 61 SE 891. (12) In the phrase "place where spirituous liquors are retailed," in a statute forbidding playing cards in such a place, "place" does not include an unconnected room in the same building rented by another person than the retailer of liquor (Dale v. State, 27 Ala. 31; Galbreath v. State, 36 Tex. 200); (13) or occupied by one of the proprietors of the liquor business (Johnson v. State, 19 Ala. 527); (14) nor does it include a blacksmith shop (Graham v. State, 105 Ala. 130, 16 S 934, 935). (15) In the phrase "street, house, or place," "place" implies a definite locality of the same kind or nature or character. Barton v. Le Grande, 17 Or. 577, 582, 22 P 111 [quot Koth v. U. S., 16 F. (2d) 59, 61]. (16) A statute punishing the procuring of a woman to enter "any place in which prostitution is encouraged or allowed," is not applicable to procuring the woman to go out in the open country. Johnson v. State, 83 Tex. Cr. 64, 65, 201 SW 990. (17) A statute requiring a railroad to state the places from and to which the road is to be operated, etc., "is sufficiently indefinite to indicate any locality within the state." Atty.-Gen. v. [§ 4] 4. Place of Delivery.[18] As used in a uniform bill of lading,[19] the unloading platform or some other place customarily used for the delivery of freight, and calculated, by reason of its character, location, or care, to afford protection against the usual hazards to unstored or unguarded property.[20] Also, the place where title passes.[21]

[§ 5] 5. Place of Employment.[22] As the subject of statutory definition a phrase meaning every place, whether indoors or out or underground, and the premises appurtenant thereto, where either temporarily or permanently any industry, trade, or business is carried on, or where any process or operation, directly or indirectly related to any industry, trade, or business, is carried on, and where any person is, directly or indirectly, employed by another for direct or indirect gain or profit, but not including any place where persons are employed in private domestic service or agricultural pursuits which do not involve the use of mechanical power.[23]

[§ 6] 6. Place of Manufacture.[24] A place where articles of trade are created out of raw material in its simple or some improved form.[25]

[§ 7] 7. Place of Residence.[26] Place of abode.[27]

Phrases: "Place of residence of the owners,"[28] "principal place of residence,"[29] "usual place of residence."[30]

[§ 8] 8. Place of Shipment.[31] As used in a bill of lading,[32] means the city, town, or locality where the shipment originated, as contradistinguished from the place of destination, and cannot be construed to mean the actual street or station from which the goods are shipped.[33]

[§ 12] 12. Public Place.[48] The term is a relative one; what is a public place for one purpose is not for another.[49] It has been variously defined[50] as: Any place that the public are invited or permitted to go or congregate;[51] a place openly and notoriously public, a place of common resort;[52] a place where all persons have a right to go[53] and be;[54] a place where the public go, no matter whether they have a right to go or not;[55] a place which for the time being is made public by the attending of people, who go there with or without invitation and without restraint;[56] a place which is in point of fact public, as distinguished from private—a place that is visited by many persons, and usually accessible to the neighboring public.[57] It has been said to be the actual use by the public, and not the legal right of the public to continue in the use, that makes a place public.[58]

Phrases: "Any public place,"[59] "a public place forever for the enjoyment of the community in general,"[60] "at the public places of the county,"[61] "in three of the most public places in the settlement,"[62] "or other public places,"[63] "streets, avenues, highways, sewers and public places."[64]

[§ 13] 13. Suspicious Place. A place in which the police suspect that the law is being violated.[65]

[§ 14] 14. Uninhabited Place. A place where there are no houses at all, a considerable distance from town, or where the houses are scattered at a great distance from each other.[66]

[§ 15] 15. Other Phrases. "All other places of public accommodation,"[67] "any other place,"[68] "any place,"[69] "county or place,"[70] "every place,"[71] "from

PLAIN CLOTHES MAN.[17] A police officer who does not wear his uniform or anything to call attention to his position while on his rounds.[18]

PLAINLY.[19] In a plain manner.[20]

Plainly expressed.[21] Used in regard to an instrument, "plainly expressed" means something more than an expression requiring unusually good eyesight to decipher; in addition to clarity of terms, it means legible.[22]

Plainly printed.[23] Printed so as to be read and understood.[24]

Other phrases: "Clearly or plainly apparent,"[25] "plainly, fully, and distinctly."[26]

PLAINLY BOUND COPIES.[27] While not a technical term in the publishing trade, it means the cheaper editions of published works as distinguished from more handsomely bound editions.[28]

PLAIN PLASTERING.[29]

PLAINT. A word derived from the French "plainte," the Latin "querela."[30] It seems that anciently, at common law, an original writ was issued only at Westminster, and to remove the inconvenience of procuring one when required in a distant part of the kingdom, a statute was passed dispensing with the original writ in causes of a minor nature and providing for a proceeding upon a complaint made to the judge or officer concerned and called a "proceeding by plaint."[31] The plaint, then, is declared to be the exhibiting of any action, real or personal, in writing;[32] in an inferior court, a process in the nature of an original writ;[33] the first process of an inferior court.[34]

PLAINTIFF.[35] The word "plaintiff" in a civil suit has a well defined legal and technical meaning.[36]

While it means a party,[37] it is never used as convertible with the term "defendant,"[38] meaning specifically the actor;[39] complainant;[40] the complaining party;[41] he who complains;[42] he, who, in a personal action, seeks a remedy in a court of justice for an injury to, or a withholding of, his rights;[43] he who sues another for something, which he says is due or belongs to him;[44] he who sues or prosecutes;[45] the one who complains of an injury done;[46] the one who initiates the action or proceeding by making application or filing petition in a court of competent jurisdiction, to protect some right or secure some remedy against defendant;[47] the one who invokes the aid of the law and puts its machinery in motion to establish a right or redress a grievance;[48] the party who is coming into court asking for rights which he claims;[49] a person asking any relief by any form of proceeding;[50] a person or party who brings an action, who complains or sues any person in an action and is so named on the record;[51] a person who essays to set in motion the machinery of the court;[52] the prosecutor;[53] whoever brings the suit, bill, or complaint.[54] It may mean an appellant, although he was defendant in the court below.[55] The word "plaintiff," occurring alone, means the plaintiff on record, not the real or equitable plaintiff.[56] The term includes the actor or principal for whom an applicant surety is bound;[57] all who by the record prosecute the action;[58] a claimant against an assignee for creditors;[59] a defendant demanding a set-off or counterclaim;[60] an intervener;[61] a party in interest, although not a plaintiff on the record;[62] the party in whose favor the original cause of action accrued;[63] a party who procures the removal of a cause from law to equity;[64] a plaintiff's agent, in regard to verification of an account;[65] and, also, in cases where the statutes so provide, a party in whose favor affirmative relief is granted,[66] or judgment rendered.[67] It does not include a defendant who serves notice on a third party.[68]

In condemnation proceedings[69] the word "plaintiff" is used only in an uncommon and liberal sense. Plaintiff complains of nothing. In fact, both parties are actors, one to acquire title, the other to get as large pay for the property as he can.[70]

In a garnishment proceeding,[71] the moving party or suitor.[72]

PLAN.[83] A delineation;[84] a design;[85] a draft;[86] a draft or form or representation of a horizontal section of anything, as of machinery;[87] a map;[88] the representation of anything drawn on a plane, as a map or chart;[89] a scheme;[90] a sketch;[91] also, a method of action, procedure, or arrangement.[92]

As applied to streets, a plot or survey indicating number, names, and locations of streets, their lines and courses, widths, grades, etc., as they are or are to be laid out and opened on the land, including all particulars germane to the general subject.[93]

Of public improvements, the general plan or system of work;[94] a profile, drawing, or picture, showing in a general way the character of the work.[95]

PLANILLAS. In Spanish law, a tax schedule.[99]

PLANING MILL.[1]

PLANK.[2] As defined by the dictionaries a broad piece of sawed timber thicker than a board;[3] a broad piece of sawn lumber.[4] In familiar speech, a plank may be fairly said to be a more or less regularly shaped oblong board.[5]

Sawn plank. In familiar speech, a board reduced to a more or less oblong shape by the aid of a saw.[6]

PLANKERS.[7] As used in connection with the construction of a vessel, a term said to mean all the men who assisted in putting on the planks.[8]

PLANKING.[9] In its common and ordinary meaning, planks collectively;[10] a series of planks in place.[11]

PLANK LINOLEUM.[12] A linoleum made by running upon the burlap, which is the back of all linoleum, a paste of two colors in stripes of equal width, and subjecting it immediately to pressure. The effect produced somewhat resembles a floor laid in alternate planks of different woods.[13]

PLANK ROAD.[14]

PLANK SIDEWALK.[15]

PLANO. In Spanish law, plain, direct; without unnecessary formality.[16]

PLANT.[17] [§ 1] A. As a Noun.[18] In its primary meaning, the word relates to growth of a vegetable character,[19] and there is involved in it the idea, not only of attachment to the soil, but of some degree of permanency.[20]

When used in connection with a manufacturing, mercantile, or industrial establishment, it has a wider significance.[21] It has been defined to be all the matters permanently used for the purposes of a trade, as distinguished from the fluctuating stock;[22] every temporary and accessory means necessary or required by an engineer to complete works, and all temporary materials built into the

[c] Real estate as included.—"It will be noticed that the only definition including real estate is found in Webster's International Dictionary, and there it is qualified by the word 'sometimes.' That there may be instances in which courts will hold real estate to be a part of a plant cannot be doubted. The ground occupied by the factory or mill, or even that part adjoining the factory, used for offices or warehouses, may be treated as a part of the plant; but a large tract of land hundreds of miles from the plant proper, to be used for the purpose of raising the raw material for use in the factory, has never been held to be a part of the 'plant.'" apart from the rest for special use;[57] any place that is planted;[58] ground occupied by trees or vegetables which have been planted;[59] land brought under cultivation;[60] especially, in the United States and West Indies, a large estate, cultivated chiefly by negroes, either slaves or free, who live in a distinct community on the estate, under the control of the proprietor or master.[61] Formerly, it denoted also a colony;[62] a dependency;[63] an original settlement in a new country.[64]

A cotton or sugar plantation is an estate or farm devoted to the cultivation of cotton or sugar.[65]

Other phrases: "Damage caused to crops, lands, fences, plantations, or buildings and their contents,"[66] "home plantation,"[67] "messuages or plantation."[68]

[§ 2] B. As an Adjective. The word is also used in an adjectival sense, as in the phrases "plantation stock"[69] and "stock, plantation utensils, and household furniture."[70]

Plantation supplies.[71] Such supplies as are necessary for the prosecution of agricultural operations;[72] and whether an article falls within that class must be determined by resorting to the usages and customs of agricultural interests.[73]

PLANTER.[74] One who is engaged in the business of producing crops from the soil,[75] one who plants[76] something in the ground or sows something therein which produces fruit or increase from this planting;[77] one who owns or cultivates a plantation.[78]

PLAQUE. Any flat, thin piece of metal, or clay, or ivory, or similar material used for ornament, or for painting pictures on, and hung upon the wall.[79]

PLASMON. A trade-mark name applied to a gritty, yellowish powder, known to the trade as lactarene, casein, or milk albumen.[80]

PLASTER.[81] A mixture of lime, hair, and sand to cover lath work between timbers or rough walling;[82] a composition of lime, sand, and hair or straw, and water, employed in overlaying the interior and exterior faces of walls.[83]

PLASTERER.[84] One that overlays with plaster.[85]

PLASTERING.[86] A covering of plaster;[87] the plaster work of a building.[88] Also, the act of covering walls, ceiling, etc., with plaster.[89]

[a] Plastering is applied directly upon walls of brick and mortar, the joints of which are left rough, that it may the better adhere; or upon a surface of laths, which are flat narrow strips of wood securely nailed to the joists, rafters, or studs, parallel to each other, and so close together that but little space (usually ¼ inch) is left for the mortar to get between them. That which passes through spreads and hardens in lumps, which key the rest of the coating to the laths. 13 Am. Encyc. (1870) p 377 [quot Mellen v. Ford, 28 Fed. 639, 642, 643].

[b] Ornamental and plain plastering.—In an action on a contract it was contended by defendant that "ornamental plastering" had a technical trade meaning, and only included such ornamental work as is modeled and cast in the shop and afterward applied to the building in a dry state; and that "plain plastering" meant the plain surface and such plain mouldings and cornices as are put on in the form of wet plaster in the building, and which are distinguishable from those cornices and mouldings which are not put upon the walls until after they are made. Upon this matter, however, there was a conflict in the testimony, and in so far as the question was one of fact the finding of the court below was conclusive in the matter, the court finding for plaintiff. I. DEFINITION AND NATURE

[§ 1] Plate-glass insurance is a contract whereby insurer, for a valuable consideration, agrees, subject to certain conditions, to indemnify insured against loss occasioned by destruction of, or injury to, plate glass.[1] It is a form of accident and casualty insurance.[2]

II. INSURANCE ORGANIZATIONS[3]

[§ 2] A. In General. Companies organized to insure against loss from the breaking of plate glass are insurance companies, within a statute providing for the organization of insurance companies.[4] Companies organized under the Casualty Insurance Act of Illinois are authorized to engage in the business of insuring plate glass.[5] A company engaged in the business of insuring against injuries to plate glass from causes other than fire transacts the business of "accidental insurance," within a statute imposing a license fee upon companies doing such business.[6] A business corporation, which proposed by contract to care for plate glass for a fixed term for a certain consideration and to replace the glass, if broken, within the period of the contract, was attempting to do an insurance business in violation of the statute.[7]

[§ 3] B. Foreign Organizations.[8] A foreign insurance company authorized to write plate-glass insurance is entitled to a certificate authorizing it to do that kind of business within the state, by a compliance with the law so far as applicable to that kind of business, without complying with provisions relating to the transaction of business within the state by foreign corporations organized for the purpose of writing other specified classes of insurance, although it also is authorized by its charter to write insurance of the kinds specified.[9] Companies organized under the laws of another state, for the purpose of insuring plate glass against damage, are subject to a penalty for a failure to comply with the provision of the insurance law, requiring companies organized in another state to file a certificate with the insurance department of this state.[10]

III. CONTRACT AND POLICY[11]

[§ 4] A. In General. Rules applicable to the construction of insurance contracts generally[12] govern as to this particular kind of insurance.[13] In the absence of a provision in the policy that the glass must be without hole or perforation when insured, a hole through a pane of glass does not render it uninsurable under such policy.[14] Notwithstanding such a policy indemnifies insured against loss occasioned by the destruction of, or injury to, the glass,[15] the liability of insurer is primary;[16] he agrees merely to insure the property itself.[17]

Validity. Such a casualty[18] as an accident damaging plate glass, arising from causes other than fire, is a contingent event which may be the subject of legal insurance.[19]

[§ 5] B. Insurable Interest. The general rule that one has an insurable interest in property if, by its destruction, he will suffer a loss[20] applies to plate-glass insurance.[21] A lessee who is bound to replace all broken glass has an insurable interest in the glass.[22]

IV. RISKS AND CAUSES OF LOSS

[§ 6] A. In General. In order that there may be a recovery on the policy, the loss must result from the particular peril against which insured is indemnified.[23] A policy covering breakage of glass in a building covered loss by breakage by the wrongful act of a third person.[24] The breaking of plate glass by dynamite used to prevent the spread of a fire was not the result of accident within a provision of the policy requiring the breakage to be the result of accident,[25] but was the result of design.[26]

Damage caused by "civil commotion." A policy, which insured against damage to plate glass caused directly by, or arising from, civil commotion, has been held not to cover damage caused by the separate acts of suffragettes in breaking windows,[27] although done simultaneously in preconcert and in proximity to one another,[28] there being no tumult and disturbance except that arising from the acts;[29] in such case the fact that insurer had made payment to plaintiffs under a similar policy for damage arising under similar circumstances was held immaterial.[30]

[§ 7] B. Excepted Risks—1. Loss or Damage from Fire. Whether an insurer of plate glass is relieved from liability by operation of a clause excepting loss or damage from fire depends on the fact whether the fire was the proximate cause of the loss.[31] Where the breaking of the glass results from the explosion of gas or material of like properties, ignited by a light or the striking of a match, the loss is not an excepted one as being caused by fire,[32] or directly or indirectly caused by fire.[33] Under a clause exempting insurer from loss resulting directly or indirectly from fire, it has been held that, where the damage is caused by an explosion of dynamite resulting from a fire, both occurring at a distance from the glass, insurer is not liable, as the fire is a cause of the loss;[34] but it has also been held that in such a case the insurer is not exempted from liability,[35] on the theory that insurer broadly assumed responsibility for all loss by breakage of the insured glass, and the proviso was intended to except only a loss which would be covered by a fire policy, the loss occurring under the circumstances related not being covered by a fire policy.[36]

[§ 8] 2. Other Exceptions. For a clause in a plate-glass policy, excepting from insurer's liability any damage "occurring before the glass is completely glazed in a workmanlike manner," to avail insurer, the break, occurring after the glazing has

[a] Fire not proximate cause of loss.—Where the glass was destroyed by a mob, attracted by a fire on the premises, which broke the glass while trying to plunder the premises, the fire was only the remote cause of the loss, the lawless acts of the mob constituting the proximate cause, and insurer was relieved from liability under such a clause. [b] Fire held proximate cause.—Under a policy which exempted insurer from liability for loss happening by, or in consequence of, any fire, whether on the insured premises or not, where the glass was broken by the use of dynamite to prevent the spread of the fire, the fire was the proximate cause of the loss so as to prevent a recovery under the policy. been completed, must have been caused by an unworkmanlike manner of installing the glass.[37] An exception for loss resulting directly or indirectly from inundation is operative as to a loss within its terms.[38] Other clauses that have been set up as exempting insurer from liability, the loss having occurred under circumstances which made the particular exception inapplicable are as follows: Loss or damage caused by acts or operations of workmen in construction of, or repairs to, the building or frames in which the glass is located;[39] loss caused by glazing;[40] loss caused by the blowing up of buildings;[41] and loss originating from breakage during removal.[42] A tornado insurance policy[43] on a building, which provides that it does not cover insurance on "plate glass in doors and windows, whereof the dimensions are nine feet or more," covers the loss by storm of an immovable and stationary plate-glass front, although larger than that specified.[44]

V. NOTICE OF LOSS[45]

[§ 9] Although notice of loss required by the policy be given to an unauthorized agent of insurer, it may be sufficient where actually communicated to insurer.[46]

VI. ELECTION OF INSURER TO REPLACE[47]

[§ 10] Where insurer elects to replace the broken glass, there is an implied obligation to perform within a reasonable time.[48] Where insurer elects to repair, and the contract of insurance is thereby superseded by the contract to repair, negligence which consists merely in the breach of the contract to repair affords no ground for an action by anyone except a party to such contract, or a person for whose benefit the contract was avowedly made.[49] An insurer electing to replace damaged glass and having the work done by an independent contractor is not responsible for the negligent acts of servants of the latter.[50]

VII. SUBROGATION[51]

[§ 11] Following the general rule,[52] an insurer paying the loss or replacing broken glass is subrogated to the rights of insured with respect to a recovery from the person whose wrongful act or default caused the loss.[53] In accordance with general rules,[54] a recovery cannot be had as for the negligence where the act was "purely accidental."[55] An insurer, insuring a tenant against the breakage of plate glass on paying for the repair of broken glass, is not subrogated to the right of the tenant against the landlord who might be liable under the lease to repair the damage.[56]

Burden of proof. The burden of proof is on the party causing damage to a plate-glass window to show that he was not in fault, the presumption being that the window was broken through his negligence.[57]

Measure of recovery. An insurer replacing plate glass, in an action against the person liable for the damage, is entitled to the reasonable cost of replacing it,[58] which is to be proved like any other question of fact.[59]

VIII. ACTIONS ON POLICIES

[§ 12] A. In General. General rules[60] control in actions on policies of plate-glass insurance.[61] Under a policy covering a lessee's liability for the breakage of glass, a denial by insurer of any liability entitled insured to sue without waiting for the expiration of the time allowed for the making of a settlement thereunder,[62] or without giving insurer an opportunity to replace the glass under an option reserved in the policy.[63]

[§ 13] B. Evidence. Proof of breakage is proof of cause of action,[64] unless there is an affirmative showing that the breakage was within an exception of the policy.[65] The sufficiency of evidence to show the existence of the subject matter of insurance,[66]
